Mayor Outlines Top Priorities After Taking Oath For Second Term

Koch: Redevelop Quincy Center, Build Concourse Streamline Government • Build New Middle School

SECOND TERM - Mayor Thomas P. Koch, the city's 33rd mayor, takes the oath of office for a second two-year term from City Clerk Joseph Shea at Monday's inauguration ceremonies at North Quincy High School. Looking on are Koch's family: daughter Abigail, son Thomas Jr., son Cornelius and wife Christine.

Mahoney New School Committee Vice Chair

The School Committee's new Vice Chairperson, Anne Mahoney vowed Monday to fight to protect the city's public schools, restore resources and "lay the groundwork for innovation."

Former Vice-Chairman David McCarthy nominated Mahoney after citing her devotion and dedication to the city's schools and the leadership she exhibits when she champions educational issues. Lebo seconded the nomination.

In his second inaugural address Monday, Mayor Thomas Koch predicted that Quincy's future redevelopment will spark economic growth throughout the region in the years to come.

"The progress we have made downtown in the past two years and the progress we will see in the next two reflect the fact that Quincy is poised to be the economic engine for our entire region," said Koch.

However, Koch, also, warned that while the future looks bright, there are difficult choices to be made now in city government as "we chart our course through the most trying economy since the Great Depression."

Koch addressed some 800 persons at North Quincy High School Monday during his inauguration as mayor for a second term and the inauguration of city councillors and the school committee.

City Clerk Joseph Shea administered the oath of office to Koch and the councillors who elected Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin as City Council president.

and stood numerous times during Koch's speech, such as when he thanked and praised the soldiers in their midst, praised former Mayor Walter Hannon, and city's employees, and described plans for a new Central Middle School.

"Today, we share a great faith in economic opportunity the likes of which our City has never seen," said Koch who credited Hannon with a vision for the city begun over 30 years ago. Koch noted that Hannon's vision entailed the first master plan for downtown and laid the foundation for the Quincy Center Concourse which he will recommend be named the "Mayor Walter J. Hannon, Jr. Parkway."

Koch said that redevelopment proposals based on more than $1 billion in private investment are being vetted by a talented team of lawyers, architects, engineers, financial advisors and planners "tasked with protecting the City's interest at the negotiating table."

"We are today negotiating a full program of development that will create thousands of new jobs, millions of dollars in new tax revenue, and a downtown that will once again become a focal point for commerce and civic activity."

Koch cautioned that the groundwork for the city's revitalization will be laid in the next 12 months and will require challenging and difficult work.

Once underway, Koch said the growth, jobs and opportunities will ripple across the city to Crown Colony.

Coughlin Elected 53rd Council President

City councillors Monday unanimously elected Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin as City Council president for the 2010-2011 term.

Prior to the vote, City Clerk Joseph Shea administered the oath of office to all councillors and opened the process for nominations.

As the council's 53rd president, Coughlin pledged to encourage "vigorous, healthy and respectful debate" as the council reviews each matter in the future years and adheres to "our role of oversight."

"There should be no question unasked or unanswered," said Coughlin in defining the council's role in protecting the city and its citizens.

"We must at all times be accountable and transparent, be just and fair, make decisions based not on the special interests which often persist in politics, but based on the facts, the law and the is known by the schools it keeps. Great school attract great people," said Mahoney who described the system's progress in establishing health programs, the arts, after school programs, and the full-day kindergarten.

Mahoney acknowledged that the "economy (is) seemingly frozen and refusing to thaw," but said education funding must be a priority even in such a harsh environment.

"It is with this idea that this school committee will not only fight to protect establish programs, but plan for a better day when we can restore programs and lay the groundwork for even more initiatives," Mahoney said.

Business Week praised the city's school system when choosing Quincy as the best city in the state for families, noted Mahoney who cited the low student to teacher ratios as a major factor in their choice.

Mahoney quoted from the article, "The community has great schools. The district prides itself on a low student-teacher ratio and teaches a diverse student body, including speakers of 54 dialects."

"I know that more is expected of parents than ever before," said Mahoney who outlined parents' efforts to raise funds for programs and

Palmucci To Host Meeting Jan. 14 On Proposed Vernon Street Bakery

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci will host a neighborhood meeting to discuss a proposal to relocate O'Brien's Bakery Thursday, Jan. 14 at 7 p.m. at the Morrisette American Legion Post, 81 Liberty St.

All neighbors are invited to attend and participate.

Brian Jackle, owner of O'Brien's Bakery, is seeking approval from the City of Quincy to relocate his bakery formerly located at 9 Beale St., Wollaston Center to Vernon Street.

Residents with questions about this or any other matter can contact Palmucci at 617-834-3945.

Mahoney promised to provide parents and the public with more information and access on the committee's website which will be enhanced to provide reports and details on sub-committee meetings.

The constant improvements to the schools mean, "New families will flood here to live," said Mahoney who also plugged the high school building program and future building proposals for both Sterling and Central Middle Schools.

Mahoney said she will continue to support a reading academy and safety and security for the schools and, vigorously, oppose a charter school as Quincy offers superior education for "all of our students."

With Mahoney's re-election and that of Isola and Lebo, the makeup of the new School Committee changed considerably this year.

The 2010-2011 committee has five women members, Jo-Ann Bragg, Elaine Dwyer, Mahoney, Isola and Lebo and two men, Koch and David McCarthy.

In contrast, the previous School Committee was composed of five men and three women. Two former committee members, State Rep. Ron Mariano and Nick Puleo did not run for re-election.

State Rules Arson In North Quincy Fire

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The State Fire Marshal's office has determined that a Nov. 28 fire at 97 Hollis Ave. was arson, spokesperson Jennifer Mieth said Monday.

"The fire has been determined to have been intentionally set," Mieth said, adding that a criminal investigation is currently underway.

"We have a specially trained unit with the State Police," said Mieth, adding that state investigators will work Quincy police and fire officials.

Police Detective Ralph Willard has been assigned to the investigation and is working with the state's arson squad.

Mieth said arson investigators generally avoid disclosing information early in their review of a case as legitimate suspects re-arrange their alibis and wannabe firebugs periodically claim credit for fires in a desire for notoriety.

The Nov. 28 fire destroyed the two-family North Quincy residence just two months after propane tanks exploded and burst into flames at the same address.

The residence is located opposite the Atlantic Middle School.

The first fire on Sept. 26 damaged the garage and part of the house and was attributed to sparks from an outdoor grill but the building has been vacant since, according to Lt. George Wirtz of the Quincy Fire Dept.

Wirtz said the building was condemned after the second fire and there are reports the property was recently sold for $182,000. Wirtz said state and Quincy police are handling the investigation.

PLANTING SEEDS OF LOVE

Those born during the month of January enjoy the luxury of being able to choose among ten different gemstones that make up the garnet family. Garnet derives its name from the Latin "granatus," which means "seed" and refers to the gemstone's small, round seed-like natural appearance. The red (pyrope) varieties of garnet are the most common. The more expensive varieties are most often green (grossular, uvarovite, demantoid, andalusite, and andradite) or orange (spessartine, hessonite). Garnet also comes in brown, pink, black, and various colors in between. Most people tend to associate garnet with the pink almandine variety, which has been popular since Roman times and is sometimes known as the "Ceylon ruby."

Legend has it that garnets give their wearers guidance in the night and protection from nightmares. Our knowledgeable staff members offer guidance, friendly smiles, and professional advice to ensure our customers' security in knowing that their investment in fine jewelry is wisely spent. Visit us at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center, and we will introduce you to the colorful world of garnets and other stunning gemstones, either in loose stones or gorgeous settings. Coughlin Pledges To Pursue The Best For City, Residents common purpose and greater good of our community."

Coughlin began his presidency by saluting three Quincy National Guardsmen who are headed for Indiana this week and Afghanistan in two months.

"Each one of you makes a difference," said Coughlin.

Sgt. Joseph M. Zero and Captain Glenn Kernusky of the 186th Combat Support Battalion were honored along with Coughlin's future son-in-law, Staff Sgt. Jimmy Lok of the 164th Transportation Unit. Each was presented with a flag of the City of Quincy.

"We are profoundly grateful for your service to our nation," said Coughlin.

After receiving the flag, the soldiers said that it will "be hoisted up the flagpole and flown" outside the barracks in Afghanistan.

"You are in the thoughts and prayers of every citizen of the city," said Coughlin who noted that the City Council last year passed real estate tax relief for soldiers serving in the Middle East. The Home Rule petition is awaiting clearance by the state legislature.

Coughlin said he would like to adopt the soldiers' creed of "never quit, never accept defeat" in pursuing the best for the city and its residents.

"I have never had the honor of wearing the uniform of our nation's military service, but like our soldiers we too have a mission here at home."

As for the city's future growth, Coughlin said it is important that Quincy's workers be included in all future plans and that economic growth "raise the boat for all of our citizens."

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro nominated Coughlin calling him "a man of principal and integrity," deeply empathetic to the needs of senior citizens, veterans and the city's youth.

Gutro said he and Coughlin joined the council in 2001 and he has been impressed by his colleague who will lead with transparency and by example.

Councillor John Keenan seconded the nomination, calling Coughlin "a proven legislator dedicated and committed to the people of Ward 3 and the people of the city of Quincy."

On a lighter note, Coughlin promised to curtail his habit of literary and historic references, stating, "You will not hear me quote one dead poet."

The audience joined Coughlin in laughing when Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi questioned whether Coughlin could reform and said, "Short meetings are over-rated."

Raymondi nominated Jeanne Reardon as Clerk of Committees who was re-elected unanimously for a 16th two-year term.

Raymondi stated that Reardon has helped every councillor in the past 30 years.

Coughlin said Reardon "provides indispensable structure to the most fundamental city council operations...."

In his inaugural statement, Coughlin also praised City Clerk and Chairman of the Licensing Board Joseph Shea.

Coughlin congratulated the new council auditor, Susan O'Connor, and thanked the council staff, Joanne Marinopoulos and Ann Alexander for their work.

In addition to Coughlin, Gutro and Keenan, Councillors Joseph Finn and Michael McFarland as well as newly elected Councillors Margaret Laforest (Ward 1) and Brian Palmucci (Ward 4) took the oath of office.

Laforest is the first woman to represent Ward 1 as a city councillor and the fifth woman to serve as a city councillor in city history.

Palmucci succeeds Jay Davis in Ward 4.

Cahill And Loscocco - That's The Independent Ticket

Patrick has Murray, Baker has Tisei and now Cahill has ... Loscocco.

And what voters in Massachusetts will have this fall: three distinct and credible choices for governor.

Today (Thursday), state Treasurer Timothy Cahill of Quincy

— an independent gubernatorial candidate — was set to announce his running mate: former State Rep. Paul J. P. Loscocco. The Holliston Republican served eight years representing the Eighth Middlesex District (Holliston, Hopkinton, and parts of Medway, Southborough and Westborough) before stepping down last year. Loscocco also served as state chairman for the John McCain Presidential Campaign in 2008.

According to campaign sources, Loscocco will change his party affiliation from Republican to unenrolled today (Thursday) at the Holliston Town Hall after a press conference announcing Cahill's choice for lieutenant governor.

Cahill called Loscocco an independent-minded Republican who is well respected on Beacon Hill. The former Quincy city councillor also said his running mate would help build consensus on major issues to help get the state moving again in a Cahill administration.

"We were looking for someone from the other party — we went back in forth as to whether it made more sense for a Democrat or a Republican but we finally came to the conclusion that for a true independent race, and to send a clear message that this is a bi-partisan run for governor — that you have people who are willing to leave the Democratic party and the Republican party," Cahill said.

"Paul has proven himself to be a very independent-minded Republican over his career. Checking his voting record he's voted off Republican many times and he's voted with Republicans. He reminds you a lot of John McCain in a lot of ways. He's very independent-minded; willing to go against the grain."

Cahill called his choice for a lieutenant governor "very bright." Loscocco's a "Double Eagle": an attorney, he graduated summa cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Boston College in 1984 and from Boston College Law School cum laude in 1987.

Cahill also says his running mate is a hard worker with a good reputation at the State House.

"It's going to be important for me to be able to work with the leadership and the members in the building. I think Paul gives me the best opportunity to do that because he is well-respected and well-liked in the building by both parties."

Cahill said Gov. Deval Patrick — a Democrat — and former Gov. Kerry Healy — a Republican — have had issues working with legislative leaders.

"That's one of the reasons we're in this mess because nobody works together up there. You can't get consensus and you can't get people to work together up there to solve problems."

The governor's race is shaping up to be a classic three-way race for the state's highest office. Perhaps for the first time in history Massachusetts' voters will have three major candidates to choose from in November.

Besides the Cahill-Loscocco ticket, the other announced major candidates are incumbents Gov. Deval Patrick and Lt. Gov. Timothy Murray on the Democratic side and two Republicans: Christy Mihos and Charlie Baker. Mihos and Baker appear headed for the Republican primary. Baker's running mate is state Sen. Minority Leader Richard Tisei.

Cahill dropped out of the Democratic party last year to launch his independent gubernatorial bid. He says he first registered as an independent voter in 1977 but slowly changed his party affiliation to Democrat based on the candidates he supported during the 1980s.

The fiscal conservative now believes the state can be run better with someone not aligned with either party.

Cahill's candidacy means voters will have another choice besides a Democrat and a Republican on next year's ballot.

And that should be welcome news to the numerous voters who have lamented in past elections:

"Gee, I don't really prefer either of these candidates. I wish someone else were running."

Well, Cahill has decided that running as an independent best matches his political style as a maverick. And he's been successful at every level of government. He was elected a Quincy city councillor eight times (serving 15 years) before winning a six-year term as Norfolk County treasurer in 1996. He then was elected state treasurer in 2002 and won re-election in 2006.

Cahill already has a few things going for him. He has state-wide name recognition serving as state treasurer the past seven years. He also has $3.25 million in his campaign fund — a little more than half of the $6 million he projects he'll need to raise to run a competitive campaign. He also has a strong grass-roots organization with 6,000 volunteers.

And now he has a running mate from an important geographical location to match his independent style.

"Paul has a very independent voting record," Cahill says. "He's from a very important part of the state — Metro-West — which right now has no representation in this race. I think it makes sense in a lot of different areas but mostly it's an independent-minded Republican who's willing to leave his party with an independent-minded Democrat who's already left his party getting together to try to solve the state's problems. I think it makes total sense."

"He's interested in doing it, he's willing to make the sacrifice both professionally as well as personally and party-wise; it's the same sacrifice I've been willing to make. I think we'll make a good team and we'll work well together."

Cahill says his campaign will need to work hard throughout the state to be successful in November. The biggest battleground will be vying for votes from unenrolled voters who outnumber Democrats. Registered Republicans are a distant third.

"We're going to fight it out, city by city, town by town," Cahill says. "If we can get about half of the independent (unenrolled) voters, about a quarter of the Democrats and about a quarter of the Republicans, we think we can win."

"Paul gives us a real shot at getting some of those Republicans. I should bring some Democrats with me — some disaffected Democrats, some moderate or conservative Democrats or even just some Democrats who are unhappy with the direction of the state. All three of us will fight for the independent vote but I feel very confident — not just because I'm an independent but because I've always done well with independents. They've always supported me and I think that's one of the reasons I'm comfortable defining myself as an independent."

And what will it take for the Cahill-Loscocco ticket to win in November?

Cahill says besides about $6 million to advertise in major TV and radio markets, it's going to take a strong grass-roots effort from New Bedford to Newburyport to New Braintree and municipalities in between.

"We're going to have to work harder than the other two candidates by a large amount because I don't have the built-in access that those guys have to money and bodies. It's going to be a state-wide race and I think Paul's strength in Metro-West is really going to complement my strength on the South Shore as well as pockets of strength that I have in Merrimack Valley, Springfield, Berkshire County and the South Coast that I've developed over the last eight years as a state-wide officer."

Cahill is counting on securing 35 to 40 percent of the vote in November to prevail in what he calls a classic three-way race.

"I like our chances. I wouldn't be doing this if I didn't think I had a real good shot at it. Some people agree; some people think it's crazy but given what I've been able to accomplish over the last 20 years of my political career, I think this is doable and as important it will give me a real shot of being successful as governor."

Of course, if Cahill prevails you can add another adjective to his political resume: trailblazer. The first independent to capture to corner office on Beacon Hill.

CHRISTMAS SURPRISE: Molly and Katy Meehan with their new puppy, Jack.

A WISH COMES TRUE.

In The Quincy Sun's annual Christmas issue, we printed hundreds of Christmas wishes written by grade 5 students attending city and parochial schools. One of those wishes was penned by Katy Meehan, a fifth grader at the Merrymount School.

Katy wished for a dog "because they are cute and cuddly and it would keep me company."

For Katy and her sister, Molly, that dream came true.

At 7 a.m. Christmas morning, Jack Meehan — an eight-week, 18-pound yellow lab — arrived at the Meehan house. The girls were shocked and delighted that Katy's wish had come true.

"I was screaming and so happy to get a puppy for Christmas," Katy says. "Jack is the best dog ever."

Molly agreed. "I was shocked when Jack arrived because when our dog died three years ago, I thought we could never replace her but Jack was the best Christmas surprise ever."

Katy and Molly's parents — Brian and Maddy Meehan — sent out electronic Christmas cards to family and friends complete with Jack's photo. One of those greetings was e-mailed to us at The Sun.

Maddy reports Jack is doing great acclimating to his new home.

THIS 1916 real photo postcard is a view of the Daniel Shed memorial that is now located at the center of the rotary on Palmer Street in Germantown. This picture was taken in its original location. The lighted beacon at the top of the monument is presently being restored using this picture as a reference. The bronze tablet at the base of the monument tells the story of the early Quincy family for whom this area was once known as Shed's Neck. Germantown later received its name from a group of investors who attempted to build an industrial town populated with German immigrants here in the 18th century. That project failed after just a few years. The Snug Harbor section of Germantown got its name from the home for old mariners built there in the middle of the 19th century. That site was later used for public housing built originally for returning WWII veterans. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Thankful, Proud Of Quincy Fire Department

On Sunday, December 20 2009, at 7:45 a.m., I awoke to the sound of smoke alarms and a house full of smoke. Being unable to find the source, I called the Quincy Fire Department.

They arrived promptly and were absolutely superb as they went about their work of putting the fire out without causing any further damage.

Clearly, Quincy residents should be proud of their firefighters and the dispatch of their work on that bitter, bitter, cold morning.

Ross Begins 2nd Term; Seeks New Buildings

By FRANK McCAULEY

The construction of three new schools, three fire stations, anew city hall, an administration building at the City Hospital and a municipal stadium, as well as street, sidewalk and sewer construction were all included in a gigantic public works program advocated by Mayor Charles A. Ross in his inaugural address as he started his second term as mayor. The mayor also declared that the local fire department is inadequate to properly cover the city and urged the need for additional officers and men and new apparatus.

BATES ASKS ELECTION BE VOIDED - DEFEATED CANDIDATE CLAIMS STATE LAWS VIOLATED

Legal proceedings to void the election of Mayor Charles A. Ross were started in Suffolk Superior Court yesterday by County Commissioner Russell T. Bates, unsuccessful candidate for a mayoral nomination in the primary election and later the unofficial chairman of the campaign committee of former Mayor Thomas J. McGrath who was defeated in the election by Ross.

Bates, charging that Ross had violated the Corrupt Practices Act in winning re-election, filed a petition asking leave to file an election petition, which, if granted, would throw the mayor out of office, and necessitate a special election. The charges are based on the returns of campaign expenditures filed by Ross, which are alleged to be false. (Editor's note: More on this in upcoming columns.)

Tea Program At Crane Library Jan. 12

Lisa Tavakoli of Quincy's Hallowed Herbs Tea House will give a talk about tea Tuesday, Jan. 12 at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy Center.

Tavakoli will discuss the five categories of tea, health benefits, and how to tell a good quality cup of tea from one that's below par.

Attendees will have the opportunity to sample different teas as well as some of the scones made at Hallowed Herbs Tea House.

Hallowed Herbs Tea House, which opened in July 2008, is an 1850s historic home with a Victorian atmosphere. The tea house offers an afternoon tea by reservation, loose-leaf specialty teas, made-from-scratch food, and classes in tea education.

Space is limited for this program and registration is required.

The program is for adults but is also suitable for children aged 10 and older.

For more information or to register, call 617-376-1316.

The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Frank McCauley Celebrates 80th Birthday With Family, Friends At Neighborhood Club

Quincy's elder statesman Frank McCauley was the guest of honor at a recent surprise party celebrating his 80th birthday.

Held at the Neighborhood Club, the party was organized by Frank's wife of 55 years, Sandra, and was attended by the couple's children, grandchildren, family and friends.

The event also featured the presentation of a citation from the Quincy City Council recognizing McCauley's 32 years of public service and his unique place in Quincy history as the only Quincy resident to have served in all four elective offices: ward councilor, school committee member, councilor-at-large and mayor.

Opera Presentation At Crane Library Sunday

A free lecture on French composer George Bizet's beloved opera masterpiece "Carmen" will be presented Sunday, Jan. 10 at 2 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

John Tischio, noted opera lecturer, will discuss the life and times of Bizet, the novella on which the opera Carmen is based, the circumstances that inspires the opera's composition, and the opera itself, followed by video excerpts from a Spanish production featuring Plácido Domingo and Julie Migenes.

Carmen, one of the world's most performed operas, tells the story of the beautiful and fiery Gypsy girl, Carmen. Free with her love, she woos Corporal of Dragoons Don Jose, an inexperienced soldier.

Their relationship leads to his rejection of his former love, mutiny against his superior, and joining a gang of smugglers. His jealousy when Carmen turns from him to the bullfighter Escamillo leads to a murderous climax.

Tischio, president of the New England Opera Club, is a retired business executive. He currently teaches several opera courses and lectures in the Boston area.

Charter Schools Have Their Place But Not Here

Over the past several months the growing controversy over whether the City of Quincy needs a charter school continues on. Recently, a public hearing on the issue showed far more opposition to a charter school than support. For some communities, in which public schools aren't working well and educationally fail children, a charter school might be a good option. However, in Quincy, the public school system works well for its student population. There is no vast outcry from parents in support of a charter school alternative.

Besides a good public school system, Quincy also has good private and parochial schools. Quincy has diversity in all its schools serving the children of Quincy. If the folks at Hanlin International think one of its schools is necessary in Quincy where is the groundswell of support for it from parents? Most charter schools succeed in getting started with parental support. The need has to come from within the community or it will fail immediately and sooner than the five years suggested by a local supporter of this charter school.

As a parent of a child who attended Quincy Public Schools from kindergarten through the Class of 2004 at North Quincy High School, I do not believe there is a pressing need for a charter school in Quincy. If the supporters of this school think it is needed in Quincy, the go out and start a private school. Charter schools take money from public schools and would actually negatively impact the education received by Quincy public school students.

A few weeks ago, in my newspaper column in the Boston Post Gazette, I mentioned Business Magazine naming Quincy as the best place to live in the Commonwealth and one of the reasons given for the praise was the public school system in Quincy.

Senator Michael Morrissey is correct, charter schools drain public funds. Like Morrissey, I think this charter school idea is "unnecessary." Quincy parents and children don't need this proposed charter school to "open new doors of opportunity and success for Quincy's children."

That door has been open for a long time. I remember when my little daughter walked into her kindergarten class at Sqauntum School for the first time, I remember when she graduated North Quincy High School at the Veterans Stadium and I remember last May at the TD Garden watching her graduate from college and I will be back again this May watching her receive her Masters Degree at Northeastern. And it all started that first day of kindergarten in the Quincy Public Schools.

Charter schools can have their place but their place isn't in a city that has an excellent public school system.

Insurance STRATEGIES
by Jim Sullivan

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

Driving a car is a responsibility that some teenagers are not ready to handle. If you are the parent of a teenager, take time to evaluate his or her driving skills. If you have questions about auto insurance, please call JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY at 800-818-8600 to arrange an insurance consultation and let's compare premiums. We offer policies for individual drivers as well as commercial vehicles and fleets. Because we represent 9 auto insurance carriers, we can offer very competitive rates and savings up to 15%. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.

Traffic crashes are the leading cause of death of U.S. teens, and research shows that teens owning cars is a contributing factor.

Researchers surmise that having their own cars gives teens a sense of entitlement about driving that makes them less cautious. Conversely, teens having to ask for the keys to the family car are more likely to have a parent monitoring their behavior, resulting in teens who are less likely to get into accidents. With this in mind, parents are asked to be discerning when it comes to evaluating driving as a right or a privilege. This important safety issue comes at a time when teens are asserting their independence yet still benefit from careful oversight.

NOTE: Researchers encourage parents to highlight the seriousness of driving privileges by requiring teens to sign driving contracts that promise they will abide by safety rules.

Police Praise Quirk For Donation To 911, Training Centers

By JOE REARDON

The Quincy Police Department recently thanked businessman Dan Quirk for his donation to the department's new state-of-the-art 911 and training centers.

Police Chief Paul Keenan presented Quirk with a plaque that will hang on the wall of the training center. The approximately $86,000 project, which entailed flip-flopping the 911 and training center rooms, was paid for by federal E911, and Security Homeland grants, along with private donations. The grant also paid for the 911 center's furniture and equipment.

Quirk regarded his donation to the department as money well spent. "It's a great investment in the Quincy Police Department," he said. "It's a pleasure to help the police department. They're always there for me. On a scale from 1 to 10,

I rate them a 10."

Among the people in attendance were Keenan, Mayor Thomas Koch and School Committeewoman Anne Mahoney.

"Dan Quirk is a special person in the city of Quincy and continues to step up and make a difference in our city," said Koch.

The 911 center has several live-feed screens on the wall of various streets and intersections in the city, as well as an updated computer center for emergency calls. The training center is a model of convenience. It will be used for press conferences and the in-house training of Quincy Police Officers by their colleagues. Certified training can also be done by outside agencies coming into police headquarters.

"A lot of Quincy Police Officers will be getting training in this room for years to come," said Keenan. "Mr.

Quirk has always been generous to the Quincy Police Department."

Handsome acrylic drawings of Quincy Police Officers from the past to present day hang on the walls of the training center. The drawings are the freehand work of Lt. Charles Santoro, who is in charge of the department's training and communications division.

Santoro has been working with painstaking detail for the past four months on wooden surfaces prepared by Frank DeVito, the city's master carpenter. One of the more touching murals is that of Quincy Police Officer Jamie Cochrane, who was killed in a motorcycle accident in 2006.

"We've spent a lot of time on it," Santoro said of the training center. "This room had to be stripped and it's not done yet."

Quincy College Winter Commencement Saturday

Quincy College will hold its annual winter commencement on Saturday, Jan. 9 at 1 p.m. at Granite Links Golf Club in Quincy. Over 200 students will receive associate degrees or certificates from the college.

Quincy College, at the commencement, will honor Marlene J. Lyons Faherty with a Distinguished Alumna Award for her outstanding accomplishments as a student, her faithful support of Quincy College, and her dedication to the education of young people.

Debra Panasuk will be recognized with the 2009-2010 Patricia M. McDermott Award for excellence in education and outstanding service to the Quincy College community and its students.

Faherty will deliver the winter commencement address to graduates and Panasuk will serve as macebearer during the ceremony.

Faherty, a native of Quincy, graduated summa cum laude from Quincy College in 1997, where she was a member of the Phi Theta Kappa society. She also earned a Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Massachusetts-Boston in Elementary Education, where she was the National Honor Society recipient of the Chancellors Academic Scholarship. She is also a recipient of the Undergraduate Teacher Education Award and the T. Scott Miyakawa Memorial Award in Sociology.

Faherty currently teaches first grade at St. Agatha School in Milton. She has also taught at St. John's Catholic School in Canton and in the Quincy public schools.

Panasuk has served as an adjunct instructor of mathematics at Quincy College for over 10 years. She earned an Associate of Science degree from Columbia-Greene Community College, a Bachelor of Arts degree in Mathematics from the College of Saint Rose, and a Masters degree in Education and C.A.E.S. in Educational Research. Measurement, and Evaluation from Boston College.

In addition to teaching, Panasuk applies her knowledge of mathematics, data management and statistics to social science research. She has utilized SAS programming to manage population health databases for over 13 countries and has cleaned, coded and analyzed data for multinational trails of drug therapies. She also teaches at Wentworth Institute of Technology.

Independent Candidate For Governor Says He Is The True Fiscal Conservative

Cahill Would Roll Back Sales Tax, Create Jobs, Expand Gaming 'Responsibly'

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Roll back the 6.25 percent sales tax, expand gaming responsibly and put more people back to work.

Those are some of the main planks in the campaign platform of State Treasurer Timothy Cahill who launched an independent bid for governor last year after switching party affiliation from Democrat to unenrolled.

The former Quincy city councillor and Norfolk County treasurer also stresses he is the true fiscal conservative in what is shaping up as a classic three-way race for governor this year.

Cahill, age 51, served 15 years as a Quincy city councillor. The longtime Quincy resident was elected treasurer of Norfolk County in 1996 and after six years made a successful bid for state treasurer in 2002. He was re-elected state treasurer in 2006.

In a recent interview with The Quincy Sun, Cahill explained his reason for running as an independent candidate, the main differences between him and the other major candidates and his positions on several state-wide issues.

WHY INDEPENDENT?

"I think people are looking for something different from what they've been getting from either party," Cahill says. "I've always felt like an independent anyway even though I've been a part of the Democratic party. I initially enrolled when I first registered to vote in 1977 as an independent and I became a Democrat based on my voting — the ballots I pulled — back in the 1980s. I've always been comfortable with it but I'm less comfortable today than I used to be given the direction of the party which is very far to the left and I would say anti-business and anti-free enterprise especially this past year based on the reaction to the 2008 downturn.

"And I think the state can be better run from the middle — from somebody not from either party — and I'm going to have to prove that but I think that's the main reason why. I'm running from the middle to represent the middle class who are less and less represented. You have big business versus big government and everybody in the middle is being squeezed to pay for both. We're paying for the bailout; we're also paying for the poor and I think that's the wrong direction."

MAJOR DIFFERENCES

"The major difference with the Democrats is that I am and have always been fiscally conservative. Deval Patrick has been the opposite. I am for a responsible government that lives within its means and again is focused on solving the problems of the middle class. I don't think either party really is. I think the Republicans have sort of defined themselves as a fiscally responsible party but they really haven't shown it. They didn't show in the last eight years with George Bush; they didn't necessarily show it in the 16 years that they had control of state government. That's when The Big Dig was managed — or unmanaged — and the project started at $2 billion and ended up costing us $15 billion.

"Republicans talk about being fiscally responsible and fiscally conservative but they haven't shown it. And I have. I've shown it in all three levels of government that I've served at."

Cahill cites his management of the School Building Program as an example of his sense of finances.

"We took a broken program that was out of control financially and righted the ship, brought the costs under control but at the same time was still fulfilling our obligations to build schools but doing it in a manner that was not soaking the middle class and forcing property taxes through the roof.

"I believe I am the true fiscal conservative in this race based on my background and based on where I come from."

Asked to elaborate on the school building program fiscal philosophy, Cahill said, "What we try to do now is define what the solution is before we start cutting checks and giving approval for projects. Under the old program, it was determined at the local level what they needed and (municipalities) basically built what they wanted and they turned over the oversight to architects and construction companies which had no incentives to keep costs down — very much like the Big Dig.

"The old program basically outsourced the oversight and the folks who were overseeing it had a financial incentive to drive the costs up because they got a percentage of the cost. There was no control and no oversight so we brought in some oversight and we are very disciplined and we are spending money as if it's not ours. I believe what we've done is develop that line between good state oversight and yet still have enough local control that people feel that it's their project.

"What we do though is when we set a budget you can't go over that budget and when you set the (state) reimbursement (for a local school project) everyone knows what the costs are in advance. Before it used to be: whatever the budget is 'don't worry about what it costs, just bill the state after (the project) is done.

"The way we do it now is we pay for our share first so a local communities aren't forced to go out and borrow the whole thing and then wait for the state to kick-in later. It's fiscally responsible; we're using our cash first so cities and towns aren't forced to go out and borrow hundreds of millions of dollars. They're also not forced to wait to get reimbursements.

"We've saved billions of dollars just in avoided interest costs over the last five years. And we've got close to 100 projects up and running; we've paid down the entire wait list and have completed almost every single project on that list. Quincy High School will be one of the last projects done under the wait list but it's coming in under this new budget — which is different than what it should have been — but we're making sure working with the Koch administration it doesn't run over that cost.

Cahill said he supports rolling the 6.25% sales tax back to 5%.

"I would absolutely support rolling the sales tax back to 5% and we'll try to do that if I am elected back to 5%. We'd also do away with the alcohol tax and the excess meals tax. If local communities voted to increase their own meals tax then we won't change that. What I want to do is lower taxes across the board.

Cahill says the way to increase revenues isn't with a higher sales tax and other states taxes, it's growing jobs throughout the Commonwealth.

"What we're looking at doing is trying to grow jobs and lowering taxes to help the economy. The two key sources of revenue for the state are income tax and capital gains tax. If you're not working — if you're not investing — your not paying either of those. Those numbers have gone down by probably close to $4 to $5 billion since this recession hit. You're going to have to tighten your belt no matter what. My plan is to cut taxes in areas that will stimulate economic growth. It's very similar to what we've done in Quincy over the years — you take unused land and you try to put it on the tax rolls. You take the old dump and an old junkyard and you turn into a Wal-Mart, a Roche Brothers and housing and you grow your tax base that way. You grow jobs and you grow your tax base. We need to grow our tax base so we're going to have to cut spending, get healthcare under control and manage government better but I don't see cutting taxes necessarily meaning that we're going to have to severely cut the size of government more than we've already cut it. But we do have to live within our means we're not going to be able to create new programs if we don't have money for them.

"And that's one of the problems with government. We'll fix a problem and figure out how to pay for it later. That's what they did in 2006 with healthcare. Let's get everyone covered and we'll kick the finance problem down the road. They did it with the Big Dig. Let's fix this road; let's submerge it, let's get it underground and we'll worry about the costs later. Well guess what? It's later. They financed the Big Dig during the 1990s under the Baker-Cellucci-Weld Administration by kicking off paying the principal until 2009. That probably sounded like a pretty good idea in 1996 or 1997 but now it's 2010. And we did the same thing with the Turnpike. And the same thing with the MBTA. They created these financing schemes that put off paying the costs for the next generation. We've got to stop doing that. Because someday the next generation is going to be here and we're going to have to fix the problem.

"That's my big complaint with both parties. They try to solve problems with gimmicks. Democrats love to raise your taxes and Republicans love to borrow money and avoid raising taxes. But at the end of the day, you still have to pay for it. So they just kick it off so the next administration has to raise taxes to pay for the cost. We are the highest indebted state in the nation on a per capita basis. We have to bring that down, we have to stop borrowing money to pay for all of our problems."

SLOT MACHINES, CASINOS

Cahill says he favors both slot machines and casinos in Massachusetts.

"I think we need revenue and we need jobs and those are two ways. I think some combination of the two would make the most sense. Maybe even starting out with slot machines and then creating legislation that would eventually allow them to grow into

Make a New Year's resolution to grow professionally through Eastern Nazarene College's Master's in Education program

Considering a career change? Looking to advance professionally as a teacher? Eastern Nazarene College's Master's in Education program offers both current and future teachers the skills needed to grow professionally while meeting the requirements for both initial and professional teaching licensure.

"Never before have teaching credentials been more important," said Karyn Donahue of Eastern Nazarene College's Adult and Graduate Studies division. "As teaching strategies evolve and new best practices emerge, learning more and staying current in the profession will be vital to success as an educator."

Designed specifically to meet the needs of working adults, ENC's Education programs for both initial and professional licensure meet once a week, enabling students to balance their work and family obligations while achieving their educational goals. Classes for initial licensure in Early Childhood, Elementary, Middle School, Secondary and Special Needs education meet one evening per week. Courses for professional licensure in Early Childhood, Elementary, Secondary and Special Needs PreK-8 education meet on Saturdays.

"The requirements for state licensure can be very confusing to students seeking an appropriate program," Donahue said. "ENC's advisors will meet with each student to design an individual program, whether the student is seeking initial licensure or a professional license."

Donahue noted that Eastern Nazarene also offers a Reading Specialist program for teachers who already have an initial license, but would like to acquire an additional license as a Reading Specialist or pursue their professional license. Best of all, at $575 per course, the program is among the most affordable programs in the Boston area, Donahue said.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, Dec. 26, 2009 at approximately 12:50 p.m., Officer Robert Pearson was dispatched to a Houghs Neck address for a "911" hang-up. This type of call comes into the station or via the State Police if it was on a cell phone. A Dispatcher will pick up the telephone and either the caller will hang up immediately or there will be no response.

Upon arrival, Officer Pearson rang the doorbell and knocked at the door but no one answered. A vehicle pulled up to the front of the house and motioned Officer Pearson to come over. The passenger in the rear seat told Officer Pearson that she flagged down the driver of the vehicle and asked her to take her to the police station because her 39-year-old son kept her locked inside a closet for approximately eight hours. Just as they were headed to the station, they saw the cruiser pulling up to the house, so they reversed directions and met with Officer Pearson.

The victim told Officer Pearson that her son was suicidal and wanted her anxiety medication to kill himself. When she refused to give him the medication, her son locked her in a closet and told her she would stay there until he received the pills. Officer Pearson requested another Officer, the Fire Department (for entry) and an ambulance respond to the scene.

Officer James Karvelis arrived and with permission from the owner, the Officers forced open the cellar door, and then went upstairs where they found the son (suspect) in a bedroom off the kitchen. He was placed under arrest for Domestic Assault & Battery and transported to the station by Officer Karvelis for booking. The victim was examined by Fallon Ambulance EMT's, but there were no apparent physical injuries.

Officer Pearson thanked the motorists for stopping and assisting the victim, who they described as being in obvious distress, waving her arms in the street with no shoes on her feet in the cold. Officer Pearson then interviewed the victim and learned that her son locked her in the closet. She said that she woke up around 3 a.m. and went into the kitchen to make tea. She noticed her son's shoes in the kitchen with mud tracked into the house. She pointed out that this upset her because he did this on numerous occasions.

At approximately 4 a.m., her son awakened and came into the kitchen where an argument ensued about the shoes and the mess he made. He then knocked the teacup out of her hand, grabbed her under her elbows and lifted/pulled her out of the kitchen, up the stairs and then stuffed her into a bedroom closet. He then told her she would be staying in the closet until she gave him her CLONAZEPAN medication. After putting her in the closet, he pushed a dresser in front of the door so she would not be able to get out.

The victim said that her son let her out of the closet twice during her ordeal to go to the bathroom. She said that she noted he was drinking beer and has a history of alcohol abuse. He also told her he would keep her in the closet for five days if she didn't give him the medication. After eight hours of being kept captive in the closet, the suspect opened the door, but lost his balance, falling into the closet.

The victim took the opportunity to flee from the house and flag down the motorists. The victim said that she is fearful of her son and does not want him to return to her home, using the words, "Never-he's dangerous-I just want him to get help."

Officer Pearson obtained an emergency restraining order and recommended that the suspect be held over the weekend. South Shore Elder Affairs was advised and an elder abuse form was filed.

Nice Work!

SCAM OF THE WEEK: Officer Mike Kelly interviewed an 82-year old victim of harassing phone calls, the victim stating that he was told he won "some money" and in order to collect the prize money, he was required to wire a $150 fee to Bruce Smith in Jamaica.

The victim went to Western Union in Dorchester and sent the money. When he returned home, Anthony Miller called to tell the victim that he was given the wrong name to send the money to and that it should be Ray Thompson. The victim called Western Union and instructed them to change the name on the wired money. The victim received another call from the original caller who said that Anthony Miller had no right to change the name, so the victim called Western Union and changed it back to Bruce Smith.

Soon after, the victim received another call demanding $390 more be sent, but the victim did not do this. A follow up call said that they needed the victim's credit card number because the prize money was on its way. Fortunately, the victim did not give out his credit card number. As in this case, if you didn't enter a contest, how can you win a prize?

Cahill: Roll Back Sales Tax, Expand Gaming, Create Jobs

full-scale casinos when the (real estate) market recovers and it's possible to get the amount of credit to build hotels and to build entertainment centers and to build malls and shopping centers around them. Hopefully (the state legislature) will come up with something this year and if they don't I'm happy to do it next year when I'm governor.

"We have to find a way to expand gaming, do it responsibly, put the model together like we've done at the lottery for the last 30 years so that it works and it brings money back to the cities and towns. I would argue that any expanded gaming money should be pooled with the lottery revenue so it goes back to the cities and towns - all of it. I wouldn't slice it up and put some of it over here and some over there. It would be one way that we could help keep property taxes down. It's also a way to get everyone to buy into it. You have 351 partners (municipalities) - no matter how they feel about gaming and how they felt in the 1970s everyone buys into the lottery because of the revenue it brings in.

"By not having casinos in the state, we're not keeping people from gambling. We're just forcing them to go out of state. It's like what we did by raising the alcohol tax: it's not like people are drinking less, they're just going to New Hampshire to buy their alcohol. So what are we continuing to drive people out of the state for places to spend their money. I think we'll see it and I think that's probably the combination and the reason is because slots at race tracks - and I'm not saying they have to be at race tracks - but slot machines in a limited number of age-appropriate locations can be done quickly and we start generating revenue in a few months, especially if they were at the track.

"Full scale casinos, which I think is a great idea, would take 3 to 5 years before you start seeing the revenue, the jobs, and they're a little more complicated to put together.

"If there's some sort of hybrid of that, I'm okay with that."

TOLL BOOTHS

"I don't see any way right now to get rid of the toll booths and to get rid of the actual toll roads until we at least pay off the debt (on the turnpike and the Big Dig project). If and when the debt is paid off, I'd be open to taking those tolls down as the legislation originally called for. At the same time we have to be cautious about our transportation needs. I'm in not in favor of raising the gas tax. We have to make sure we do this responsibly so as of now I think we have to keep them up until we pay off the debt. But I think they can be run better. I don't think we have to look at raising the tolls every two years just to keep the agency going or to keep the people employed. We can certainly look at technological ways to increase efficiency there so we're not hiring 400 individuals to collect tolls. I don't see any way right now in our fiscal situation where we can just take them down and not have to pay for it some way.

"Long term, if the numbers made sense, we'd certainly look to do it. But I don't want to commit to it like the governor committed to lowering everyone's property taxes. I don't know what's doable. I want to focus on what's doable. What I think is doable is lowering taxes across the board: for businesses, for small businesses, for corporations, for individuals - so we can create jobs which will pay us more revenue and we can incentivize investment which will also pay us more revenue. We get 70 percent of our revenue from those two sources - personal income taxes and capital gains taxes combined. If we put 100,000 people back to work, we would make up more money than if we try to use the sales tax revenue to sort of get of this financial mess we're in.

It's the only long-term way to do it. If you have a $28 billion budget, you're not going to be able to balance it with little pieces over here and there; raising excise taxes - nickel and dime people."

'NOT IN IT JUST TO WIN IT'

"I don't want to do this just to win and then find that the next four years are miserable and I can't change the direction of the state and we can't put people back to work," Cahill says.

"The single biggest challenge we have is trying to find jobs for the 300,000-plus people who are unemployed and the close to 500,000 people who are underemployed. Nothing else really matters and if we can solve that problem it allows us to figure out how to solve all the other problems. How do we fully fund education, how do we get this healthcare coverage under control.

"We can't solve any of those problems if we can't first try to get a large percentage of those hundred of thousands of people back to work."

Koch: Name Concourse For Mayor Hannon

Mayor Thomas Koch recommended Monday that the Quincy Concourse be named the Mayor Walter J. Hannon Parkway to honor the mayor who envisioned the new Quincy Center 30 years ago.

"Walter Hannon has played a critical role in the future of Quincy Center for the last three decades. It is for that reason that I will ask the City Council to name the new roadway in his honor," said Koch.

"Make no mistake, without this new road, there will be no redevelopment of Quincy Center," said Koch of planned east-west connected through the city's main business district. Final construction is expected to get underway this spring.

Koch spoke during his inauguration ceremony at north Quincy High School after describing the many mayors who have contributed to the plans for a revitalized Quincy Center.

From Mayor James McIntyre's vision to the present, Koch said, "Each succeeding mayor continued to put the pieces together."

Koch described Hannon's service as city councillor, state representative, mayor and Planning Director, and recalled that Hannon developed the first master plan for downtown, brought the Expressway ramps and the Adams T Station to Quincy.

Most recently, Koch noted that Hannon served as chairman of the committee for zoning reform.

As Hannon stood, Koch said that Mayor Walter J. Hannon Parkway "... has a nice ring to it. Doesn't it? Especially without the word 'memorial.'"

"I'm very honored," Hannon said after the ceremony but he added, "They should really name it after my wife."

Hannon and his wife, Patricia, raised five children.

the shipyard and the Wollaston and North Quincy commercial districts.

Before the economy rebounds and the city's revitalization gets underway, Koch said there will be difficult choices due to the current economy and he expects to streamline city government even more.

"Your city government is smaller than it was two years ago, and it may get smaller still as we confront additional local aid cuts and declining revenue as the economy churns slowly toward recovery."

While finances will be challenging, Koch pledged to preserve "those assets at our community's core—public safety, education, public works and our parks."

Koch then pledged to protect the city's educational opportunities, noted the new Quincy High School will open on time and on budget and described plans for a new Central Middle School.

"The community we leave our children will depend largely on providing them now with the tools they will need to succeed and that means continuing our sharp focus on the health of the Quincy Public Schools," said Koch.

Koch, also, cited Congressman Bill Delahunt, State Treasurer Timothy Cahill and the city's legislative representatives, Sen. Michael Morrissey and Reps. Ron Mariano, Bruce Ayers and Stephen Tobin for their efforts for the city as well as the work of the city council.

Text Of Mayor Thomas Koch's Second Inaugural Address

Reverend Clergy, Former Mayors, Treasurer Cahill, Members of the state delegation, city councilors, members of the School Committee, Citizens of Quincy, Friends all:

I stand before you humbled and grateful for the opportunity to serve this great City we all love. As I have said many times before, I am blessed beyond measure, including the opportunity to serve as Mayor. Thank you for affording me this honor.

It was true two years ago when I first took this oath, and it is true today – I would not be standing here now without the support of my wife, Christine, my children, Cornelius, Abigail, and Tom Jr; my mother Simone, my brothers and sisters, my entire family, and my friends. Thank you, every one.

Let us take a moment to thank all of our service men and women, a number of whom are here with us today, for the sacrifices they and their families make for our Nation. Across America today, there are people gathered at civic events just like this. We must never forget that it is your selfless courage protecting our freedoms that makes this ceremony possible. There are no words strong enough to convey what you mean to us, so the best we can do is pause for a moment and simply say: Thank you! (PAUSE).

My friends, as we say goodbye to the first decade of the new millennium, we recall those leaders and citizens who have gone before us, building a great City upon a foundation of economic opportunity, safe streets, quality schools, and beautiful natural resources.

As we welcome a new decade, let us do so with the same abiding faith in this great City as those who came before us. Faith in Almighty God. Faith in one another. Faith in our future.

A faith that recognizes our challenges in these economic times, but allows us to forge ahead. A faith in the future for all of our citizens, young and old. A faith that our children will dream and succeed. A faith that our economy will provide opportunity for every family in every neighborhood. A faith that we may all experience peace in our hearts, peace in our homes and peace in our Nation.

There is a verse from scripture that states: "You are the light of the world. A city set on a mountain cannot be hidden. Nor do they light a lamp and then put it under a bushel basket. It is set on a lamp stand, where it gives light to all in the house. Just so, your light must shine before others."

The faith we share in this community is that light. It is the shining light of economic opportunity; the shining light of the teacher in the classroom, the shining light of the police officer in the street; the shining light of the firefighter arriving in our time of need; the shining light of this community coming together. It is because of our faith in our City that our light will shine even amid the toughest of times and only grow brighter in the years ahead.

Today, we share a great faith in economic opportunity the likes of which our City has never seen. Our effort to redevelop Quincy Center will mean jobs and historic growth, the kind of growth that this City needs to provide the education, public safety and public works our citizens deserve.

I am proud to say you will see real progress when, this summer, work begins on the final phase of construction of the Quincy Center Concourse, a road through the heart of downtown first envisioned more than 30 years ago. Construction will create new jobs, and the road's completion will be the cornerstone for more than $1 billion in private investment over the next several years.

Quincy Center redevelopment has had many hands at the helm. Today, we use buzz words like smart growth, transit development, and mixed-use. It was not too long ago that our Mayor and State Senator at the time, James McIntyre, used these principals before they were popular terms and set the stage with his work with the MBTA and the creation of the City's first planning department. Each succeeding mayor continued to put the pieces together.

But when one looks at the history of the downtown, there is a gentleman who stands out. A man who served as a City Councilor, State Representative, Mayor and Planning Director. Whether it was the first master plan for downtown he conceived, the work he did to bring the Quincy Adams T station and the Expressway ramps to South Quincy, or most recently, serving as chairman of the committee that authored the new zoning code for downtown, Walter Hannon has played a critical role in the future of Quincy Center for the last three decades. It is for that reason that I will ask the City Council to name the new roadway in his honor: the Mayor Walter J. Hannon, Jr. Parkway.

Make no mistake, without this new road, there will be no redevelopment of Quincy Center. But my friends, the parkway is but a first, though vital, step toward a new downtown that will continue to take shape over the next several years. We are today negotiating a full program of development that will create thousands of new jobs, millions of dollars in new tax revenue, and a downtown that will once again become a focal point for commerce and civic activity.

Our work over the next 12 months will be especially critical to these efforts. As we shape the future of Quincy Center, negotiations will be challenging, arduous, and require the talent and effort of many.

We are committed to getting it done, and in the coming weeks you will be introduced to the team of lawyers, architects, engineers, financial advisors and planners tasked with protecting the City's interest at the negotiating table. The talent of this group of individuals is unprecedented for any project in this City's history, and it will guarantee that the decisions ultimately made by my administration together with the City Council will be made with the very best information and the very best protection for our taxpayers.

The master agreement at the heart of our negotiations with the developer will in the near future be in the hands of the City Council, which deserves great credit for all its work to get us where we are today. And that agreement will trigger an extraordinary permitting process, which will only move forward if we continue to work together – our administration, our state leaders, the City Council, and the public. Last year, we held a series of 20 public meetings, and you can expect similar public input as we move forward with the specific plans for the project. The largest private investment in our City's history deserves the most extensive public process in our City's history, and that is exactly what will happen.

The progress we have made downtown in the past two years and the progress we will see in the next two reflect the fact that Quincy is poised to be the economic engine for our entire region. The growth, jobs, and opportunity we are pursuing in Quincy Center will expand to areas across the City. We will see growth at Crown Colony, growth at the Quincy Shipyard and new opportunities in our existing commercial districts in Wollaston and North Quincy.

Government alone cannot create economic development, but we can create the atmosphere and lay the groundwork for the historic new opportunities of the years ahead. It is this shining light of opportunity that is the single most important thing we can provide to ensure the City built by those before us and shared by us today continues to be that "remarkable place" about which John Adams wrote.

We were reminded about that assessment a few months ago when a national magazine declared Quincy the best City in the Commonwealth to raise a family. They found out what we in this room already knew: We have safe streets, a wonderful school system, a great diversity of population and culture, and natural resources that are not only beautiful, but protected and cherished.

As we chart our course through the most trying economy since the Great Depression, it is once again our faith in this City that makes us steadfast in our determination to preserve those assets at our community's core – public safety, education, public works, and our parks. While fostering economic opportunity will secure our long-term future, the challenges before us require action now.

Your City government is smaller than it was two years ago, and it may get smaller still as we confront additional local aid cuts and declining revenue as the economy churns slowly toward recovery. We have done much to make government more efficient in the last two years – finding millions of dollars of savings, cutting millions of dollars in spending, and consolidating operations wherever possible. We cannot ignore the fact that circumstances will require us to continue this effort.

I will undertake these measures mindful of the fact that our teachers, our police officers, our firefighters, our clerks and our laborers, are the people that keep this City moving on a daily basis.

These public employees have willingly made sacrifices over the last two years in order to preserve jobs and protect services. There will be more difficult choices to be made, but I wish to be abundantly clear: We will do everything in our power to keep people in jobs that are critical to making this City the finest in the Commonwealth.

These services are vital for our children who deserve a quality education, vital for our families who deserve clean streets and parks, and vital for our seniors who deserve to feel safe in their homes and neighborhoods and deserve to know they can count on the City for programs and services.

As we work to make government more efficient, there is much we can do without adding to our bottom line. Over the course of the next two years, we will be unveiling new plans to protect our environment, new plans to continue our fight against the scourge of drug abuse, and new zoning regulations that will protect our neighborhoods and foster development in the right places. We owe our citizens no less.

The community we leave our children will depend largely on providing them now with the tools they will need to succeed, and that means continuing our sharp focus on the health of the Quincy Public Schools.

The strength of our faith in this community is no more evident than in our schools, and that is in large part because of the opportunity we provide our families: Small class sizes. Talented teachers. An administration that cares deeply about each child. While we acknowledge the financial challenges we face maintaining our school system, our children must come first. We must remember that the dreams of our children are shaped in the classroom, and we must provide them with a safe and functional learning environment.

Standing in this room, a kid from Norfolk downs, I am reminded of the vital role North Quincy High played in my life. It makes me remember a recent conversation with an old friend. He said to me: You know, if you ask people to remember who won the Super Bowl a few years ago or who won the Academy Award, they probably can't remember. But ask them to remember a teacher or a mentor that affected their life in a positive way, I guarantee they remember exactly who that person was.

That is the great power of education, and that is why we must keep our promise to our children that the Quincy Public Schools will be among the best in the Commonwealth for years to come.

I am proud to say that through the hard work of many, our new Quincy High School will open on time and on budget later this year. Our work over the last two years allowed us to cut costs, hold the line, and still build a first-class educational facility of which we can all be proud.

A philosophy of function over form will guide us as we begin to build a new Central Middle School, a project that is absolutely necessary even in these difficult times.

We will be finalizing site plans in coming months, and we are grateful for the state School Building Authority and Treasurer Cahill for working with us to make a new school obtainable and affordable for Quincy.

There those who say there is no need for a new Central. I remind this community that the state already believes that Central is physically one of the worst school buildings in the entire Commonwealth, and state authorities took the rare step of saying that renovation is out of the question.

There are those who say we should delay this project because of the economy. I say it is precisely because of the economy why we should act now: Prices for materials are down. Construction costs have never been more competitive, the need for new construction jobs is real, and the condition of the building compels us to act now.

As I've indicated since taking office, we need to be honest with the public, acknowledge the true costs of this project, and budget for it appropriately. And I will require that the School Committee and Council agree that the existing Central site be sold and placed back on the tax rolls.

The faith in our future comes from many sources, joining together to form the shining light of our community. Quincy Medical Center, providing medical care to our community. Quincy College and Eastern Nazarene College, providing educational opportunities. Cultural groups, service clubs, youth organizations, working to make this community a better place. Our business leaders whose counsel will be invaluable to the creation of economic opportunity at the heart of our future. Our friends in labor, who will always have a seat at the table and the promise of job creation. Our Congressman, Bill Delahunt, and his tireless commitment to our City. Our state delegation for their work ensuring that Quincy remains a top priority on Beacon Hill. Our City Councilors, whose daily work is the foundation of good government, and our School Committee, whose dedication to our school children and classrooms has never wavered.

There are those who have little faith and would rather see the shining light extinguished, but let us work together as political leaders, spiritual leaders, educational leaders, public servants and citizens all, to keep the bright light shining, to have faith in one another and provide a better future for all in this City. My friends, there is much work ahead as we deal with the issues before us. But with your help, we will get the job done.

God Bless you, and God Bless the City of Quincy.

What Impacts Your Credit Rating

The credit-card companies have long had suggestions for how to raise your credit score, but how badly does your credit suffer when things go wrong? The surprising answer is that those who've had excellent credit are penalized more heavily than those with poor credit when something goes wrong.

According to finance guru Liz Pulliam Weston, here are approximate examples of the penalty for credit scores of a mediocre 680 and an excellent 780:

—Be 30 days late on a payment: a 680 score will get a penalty of 60 to 80 points, where a 780 score will get a penalty of 90 to 110 points.

—Max out your card: a 680 score will get a penalty of 10 to 30 points, while a 780 score will get a penalty of 25 to 45 points.

—Suffer a foreclosure on your home: a 680 score will get a penalty of 85 to 105 points, where a 780 score will get a penalty of 140 to 160 points.

—Agree to debt settlement: a 680 score will get a penalty of 46 to 65 points, where a 780 score will get a penalty of 105 to 125 points.

—File for bankruptcy: a 680 score will get a penalty of 130 to 150 points, where a 780 credit score will get a penalty of a whopping 220 to 240 points.

There are some significant difference between those with 680 and 780 credit scores, one being longevity. Those with the higher credit score likely have a number of cards and a long credit history, possibly 15 years or more. The lower score is likely that of a person with only eight years of credit history.

Use of credit availability matters, too. Someone with a high credit score likely uses less than 25 percent of the availability, compared with up to 50 percent use by someone with the lower score. This is where not closing your unused accounts comes into play: The minute you close an account, your total available credit goes down and the percent of credit you're using on other cards rises.

If you are among the many that are seeing credit-card interest rates suddenly soar for no apparent reason, don't close the accounts. Pay them off quickly, and then don't use them.

Warm Up To Energy Savings

(NAPS)—Besides making your home chilly in the cooler months, an old, underperforming home heating system can also leave you with high energy bills that stretch your household budget.

According to ENERGY STAR, a home's heating and cooling system accounts for as much as 50 percent of that home's energy use.

As system efficiencies decrease and energy costs increase, it makes sense to replace an obsolete heating, ventilating and air-conditioning (HVAC) system with new, more energy-efficient equipment. To end up with a system that best meets your needs, consider the following steps:

Inspect. To analyze your home's current heating and cooling system, invite a certified technician to inspect and service the system. North American Technician Excellence (NATE)-certified technicians, for example, can identify existing or potential problems, take steps to repair or avoid them and, if appropriate, recommend new systems that better match your heating and cooling needs.

Learn. Become knowledgeable about efficiency ratings, heating and cooling capacities and other factors that affect equipment performance. It's also a good idea to research the types and brands of systems available.

Consider where the system will be installed. Do you require an outdoor unit or will you need to install the unit in a basement, attic or closet?

Think green. Taking an environmentally friendly approach to equipment purchases and installations can improve the indoor air quality in your home and reduce your carbon footprint.

Fortunately, it usually results in increased energy savings, too. So choose a heating unit that's sized for the heating and cooling demands of your home, and be sure your home has sufficient insulation and the ductwork is properly sealed. Otherwise, you may lose some of the efficiency your new system offers.

Finally, as you shop for a new system, consider the compact, 33-inch line of Coleman multi-position gas furnaces. These new furnaces feature some of the industry's highest annual fuel utilization efficiency (AFUE) ratings—as high as 98 percent—and offer EcoTrak technology, which provides homeowners with customizable airflow and comfort based on the climate in which they live. In addition, these models also qualify for most local utility rebates as well as up to $1,500 in tax credits under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009.

First-Time Homeowners: Clean House Naturally With Inexpensive Improvements

(ARA) - You narrowed the long house-hunting search down to your favorite option, made an offer the homeowners couldn't refuse, and are well-positioned to take advantage of that $8,000 first-time home buyer federal housing tax credit. All that's left to do is move in.

But the excitement of making a home your own can dim the first time you open a cabinet door or look in the oven to realize not everyone shares the same commitment to good housekeeping.

Whether cleaning your new home before moving in, or looking for a way to juggle the increase in housework that comes when you move from an apartment to a larger condo or single-family home, tidying up your environment doesn't have to be a tough or expensive task. Moving into a new place is a great time to start fresh, breaking out of old routines and trying different things, including living a more natural lifestyle at home.

"Moving into a new home can be exciting and overwhelming at the same time, but a few simple steps can ease the transition," says Jen Singer, family lifestyle expert. "Think of it as a clean slate for your family, regardless of whether someone previously lived there."

Start off fresh

It's the dirty little secret of home buying - sometimes the previous owners leave a mess behind when they move out. "Even if they don't leave a mess, you'll still want to give your new home a good cleaning so it truly feels like you're making a fresh start," Singer says.

Before you settle into your new home, dust, mop and scrub everything from the ceiling to the floor. It'll save you from feeling like you're living in someone else's dirt, and give you a brand new start in your new home.

Divvy the chores

You may love the fact that your new home affords you more living space, but with more space comes more chores. Start out by fairly distributing chores among family members.

"It might be fun to play with your new washing machine now, but doing all the laundry all the time will get old fast," Singer says. "So task your spouse with grabbing a natural laundry stain remover that cleans powerfully to tackle tough stains, such as Nature's Source

Facing Tighter Budgets, More Homeowners Are Remodeling

(ARA) - With more Americans downsizing their household budgets, larger-scale renovation projects are out and frugal remodeling is in. And when it comes to saving money, experts say home improvement projects that increase energy efficiency are among the best investments to deliver paybacks - now and in the future.

The average return on investment for midrange home improvement projects focused on aesthetic appeal, such as kitchen or bathroom remodels, is down since 2007, according to "Remodeling" magazine.

"Energy efficiency upgrades provide homeowners with the rare opportunity to see a return on their investment almost immediately and at resale," says Kateri Callahan, president of the Alliance to Save Energy, a Washington, D.C.-based non-profit dedicated to promoting energy efficiency. "We can't always predict how the market will impact home prices over the long term, but all homeowners can improve their home's energy efficiency to increase its value."

Heating and cooling can account for nearly half of a home's energy bill, according to the Alliance to Save Energy, and with temperatures dropping, it's the right time for homeowners to focus on ways they can trim costs and energy consumption.

"The reality of the new economy is that homeowners want to save money while maintaining the value and comfort of their homes," says Mike Lawrence, vice president and general manager of Insulation Systems for Johns Manville, a manufacturer of building products. "There are economical and smart steps homeowners can take that will positively impact their monthly energy bills today and their home's value tomorrow."

Homeowners can tackle projects that are low in cost and high in value and return on investment, either as do-it-yourself projects or by hiring a professional contractor.

To get started, homeowners should first estimate the current performance of their home by using an online energy efficiency assessment tool, such as the Home Energy Analysis test available at JMHowner.com. Online assessments help gauge the savings that could be realized by making efficiency upgrades.

"After evaluating their home, most homeowners will find that adding insulation to their attic is a smart and cost-effective first step, since most homes are under-insulated," Lawrence says. "When adding insulation, homeowners should also consider weatherizing their attic to help eliminate any holes or gaps that may exist in the floor or walls. By using caulk, spray foam or weather stripping to close such gaps, homeowners can further decrease wasted energy."

A programmable thermostat is another cost-effective option that helps boost home energy efficiency. Programmable thermostats let homeowners regulate the temperature of their home to deliver savings without sacrificing comfort. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, homeowners can save about $180 a year by properly setting their programmable thermostats and maintaining those settings.

A triple return on your remodeling investment

Compared to other home improvement projects, energy efficiency upgrades typically come with a considerably smaller price tag, compared to aesthetic-focused renovations like kitchen and bathroom remodels. In addition, there's a triple return on these remodeling investments over the course of home ownership:

- Save on your energy bill today: According to the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE), with a properly air sealed and insulated home, homeowners can reduce their heating and cooling costs by as much as 30 percent. The average U.S. home needs 19 inches of attic insulation for maximum energy efficiency.

- Save up to $1,500 with a tax credit: Through 2010, insulation purchases qualify for a 30 percent federal tax credit for energy-efficiency improvements, which reimburses homeowners up to $1,500 for the cost of materials. Additional incentives from adding insulation or making other energy efficiency improvements may be available from state and local governments and utilities.

- Save for the long term: Investments made in home energy efficiency pay dividends for the lifetime of a home and improve the home's resale value. According to the Appraisal Institute, for every dollar saved in annual utility costs, homeowners can expect to add $20 to their home's market value.

Lady Plumbers Take Note

Q: I would bet that even most lady plumbers would not call an O-ring a washer! To enlighten you, an O-ring is (usually) a round cross-section thing that overall is shaped like an "O." It comes in many diameters and cross-section widths. A washer is more like a solid chunk of hard rubber with a hole in the middle for the screw that holds it in place in the stem. Now you will not make that mistake again.

- R. Muschett, via e-mail

A: Like corrections when they come with a side of old-fashioned sexism. I'm sure professional lady plumbers everywhere are relieved to finally know the difference between O-rings and washers.

That said, it is indeed important to note the difference between O-rings and washers, particularly when describing what you need to a home-improvement store employee (male or female) who doesn't know the difference. Mr. Muschett's description of each is pretty accurate.

More importantly, when replacing an O-ring or washer, bring the old part with you to the home-improvement store to get the correct size. Washer/O-ring assortments in common sizes also can be purchased so that you always have a small variety on hand before having to perform any repairs. And, if you're really on the ball and know the brand and model of each of your home's faucets, you can buy a repair kit with the exact size washers and O-rings - if the faucet isn't too old.

Conquer clutter ... before it starts

It's an unwritten law of physics - when you move into a bigger place, your furniture, clothes and other things multiply to take up all the new space. More space and more stuff can add up to clutter and ultimately, more waste.

"Resist the urge to fill your closets and counters with new things," Singer warns. "Instead, look at new ways of using pieces you already own."

Another clutter-cutting tactic - if you just moved boxes that you packed two moves ago and haven't unpacked since, get rid of them. "You may not even want to open them before donating or recycling them," Singer suggests. "After all, whatever is in them is something you've done just fine without for quite a while."

Personalize with paint

Even if the sellers of your new home put a fresh coat of paint throughout the house before they left, repainting is an easy, inexpensive way to personalize your environment. "Don't be afraid to pick colors that are a shade darker than you'd normally go for. You'll be surprised to find how it can show off your personal style," Singer says.

In keeping with your commitment to live naturally, look for low VOC paints, especially if you're repainting in the winter when ventilation will be limited.

Just Another Winter's Day At Fenway Park

By SEAN BRENNAN

When John Updike famously referred to Boston's Fenway Park as "a lyric little bandbox of a ballpark," in his moving article about Ted Williams: Hub Fans Bid Kid Adieu (The New Yorker, 10-22-1960), I doubt he had ever considered that one day Fenway Park would be magically transformed into a "lyric little icebox of a ballpark." But, luckily for fans of hockey in Boston, that is exactly what happened on New Year's Day as the National Hockey League (NHL) brought its annual Winter Classic to the Fens.

It was an event for the ages.

Over 38,000 fans, of both the Boston Bruins and the Philadelphia Flyers, joyfully crammed into the park to watch as these bitter rivals skated outdoors, on a rink that covered spots on the Fenway infield usually reserved for local heroes like Kevin Youkilis and Dustin Pedroia.

These fans, including this writer, had much to be thankful for on the first day of 2010. Fenway Park was a sight to behold. It was no longer the summer getaway most of us are used to seeing, but instead, the park became a winter wonderland. Smaller rinks for pee-wee games were set up in right and left-center field, the iconic Green Monster was adorned with both teams' logos and its fabled hand-operated scoreboard reflected the score of hockey game—a cool change from that of a usual Boston Red Sox-New York Yankee affair.

From the right field bleachers (Section 43, Row 29 to be exact), I was able to look around the stands in all directions—what a sight to behold. Bruins fans, dressed in replica jerseys and throw-back sweaters, arrived long before the first puck was dropped and reveled in a carnival atmosphere that would have rivaled any in Fenway's long history. Before the game even began, fans were treated to a parade of Bruins greats, a moving rendition by James Taylor of our national anthem, a flyover of a B52 Stealth Bomber, which, by itself was worth the price of admission, and a memorable meeting between Bruins' great Bobby Orr and Flyers' great Bobby Clarke for a ceremonial drop-of-the-puck at HISTORIC FENWAY PARK was turned into a winter wonderland for the 2010 NHL Winter Classic held Jan. 1. The Boston Bruins and the Philadelphia Flyers played in front of a packed house of 38,112 fans with the Bruins skating away with a 2-1 overtime victory. center ice.

With Fenway Park literally shaking at its foundation, the current Boston Bruins walked out of the home dugout and onto the ice (the Flyers came out of the visitors dugout). As the first period got underway, you could feel the excitement in the bleachers build with each pass, each check, each save. It didn't even matter that the views from these seats were less than ideal. It was all about just being there. It was about sitting in the cheap seats, watching a hockey game unfold at a place some consider to be the benchmark of athletic venues in this country. Fans cheered, some jeered, but almost everyone understood that what they were witnessing was an once-in-a-lifetime experience, and no one took it for granted.

The game itself was slow to develop. The first twenty minutes came and went (0-0 after the first period). That all changed early in the second period, when for some reason, Boston goalie Tim Thomas left his goal wide-open to cross-check Philadelphia's Scott Hartnell in response to dirty play by the Flyer. Danny Syvert scored on the open net, giving his team a 1-0 advantage.

As the final period wound down, the Bruins, a team that has struggled all year scoring goals, were minutes away from being shutout. But that all changed after the Flyers' Kimmo Timonen was sent off for tripping at the 16:08 mark. When the Boston power play unit took the ice, Fenway Park exploded with anticipation and excitement. And when the Bruins' forward Mark Recchi tipped in a pass off the blade of defenseman Derek Morris, tying the Winter Classic at 1-1, Fenway lost its collective mind. It was goose bump inducing.

Another Flyer penalty at 19:14 of the third period put Boston back on the man-advantage, but the Bruins, try as they may, could not finish off Philadelphia in regulation and so the Winter Classic went into overtime.

With the tension building with every shift, the Bruins' Thomas made two spectacular saves, keeping hope alive for the 38,000 in attendance; and at 1:57 of OT, when Boston's Patrice Bergeron weaved a perfect pass to forward Marco Sturm for a one-timed goal, Fenway Park, once again, became that place where lifelong memories are made.

Leaving the park and stepping out onto Lansdowne Street, with Bruins fans celebrating like we had won the Stanley Cup, it hit you that what you had witnessed was special. It will be a day to remember. The Bruins beat the Flyers in Fenway Park.

A classic moment, indeed.

LEGIONS OF BRUINS fans converged on Boston's Kenmore Square for the 2010 NHL Winter Classic. Boston Bruins Hall of Famers, Cam Neely (#8) and Raymond Bourque (#77), were among the many former hometown players who were given their due by loyal supporters of the team.

Slow Start Combination of Injuries & Inexperience

Red Raiders Aiming To Get Back On Track

By SEAN BRENNAN

The North Quincy Red Raiders started this season knowing that much of its roster would be using this year to gain valuable varsity experience—to get their feet wet at a higher competitive level of basketball. Unfortunately for North, injuries have slowed down the progression that was expected to pick up steam as the team began the New Year.

After Monday night's non-league loss to undefeated Brockton High School, the Raiders' record stands at 1-6 overall and 0-3 in the Patriot League. Not necessarily the start NQHS head coach Michael Jorgenson probably had in mind when the schedule tipped off back in December, but as they say, "it is what it is."

"This year we have a lot of new kids in the program,"

Jorgenson said on Monday night. "We really don't have a lot of varsity experience so we have been working on the fundamentals, trying to get better each game."

"The last couple of seasons this program had players who knew what to expect at this level. This year, with only three seniors, we have been trying to get the new players some of that experience but unfortunately, we have had some injuries that have slowed down that progression. But this group has a wonderful attitude and they are working hard to get better."

With such a young team (ten underclassmen), Jorgenson is leaning on his trio of seniors for leadership. Team captains Cara Murtagh (senior guard) and Devon McKay (senior guard) and senior forward Anna Holcomb have been given the job of holding the team together through its early-season struggles and injuries.

"Cara is a starter and she is a team captain, as is Devon, so I have been asking them to take on more of a leadership role this season," said Jorgenson. "Anna has been providing that senior leadership as well and has become a very good shooter, which is something that we did not have last year."

Team captain Montana McBirney (center) leads the junior class. She, according to her head coach, brings the team additional experience playing at the varsity level, while also providing solid play in the paint.

"Montana has some varsity experience and she has and will continue to be an important player for us in the post," added Jorgenson.

The rest of the junior class includes Karla Fernandes (forward), Emily Gray (guard) and Kelsey Powers (forward) and the sophomore class includes Amber Jones (guard), Courtney Timmins (forward), Shannon Blaser (forward), Olivia Muren (forward), Julia Murphy (center) and Erin Renken (center).

"The injuries we have had, including some serious ones, has kind of slowed down the progression of our younger players," said Jorgenson. "Olivia Muren started the first few games before getting hurt, she has returned and I am hoping that we can get her back into the mix. She is a strong player."

"With the injuries we have had thus far, there has been a bigger learning curve. But we can and will get through it. I am expecting the team to come back from the break with a great attitude and with players we have returning we should be able to get back on the right track."

Recent Game Results

North Quincy vs. Brockton

The Raiders dropped a non-league game to Brockton HS, 70-32, on Jan. 4. Montana McBirney led all North scorers with 11 points; sophomore Olivia Muren chipped in with nine points and sophomore Amber Jones finished with six points.

The loss drops NQ's overall record to 1-6.

North Quincy vs. Braintree

In the championship game of the 1st Annual Abigail Adams Basketball Classic, held at NQHS over Christmas break, the Red Raiders fell to Braintree HS by a score of 63-40.

Montana McBirney (15 points, nine rebounds), Olivia Muren (10 points, eight rebounds) and Anna Holcomb (five points, five rebounds) led North Quincy.

North Quincy vs. Weymouth

In a first-round game of the Abigail Adams Classic, North Quincy defeated Weymouth HS, 50-41, in overtime for the team's first victory of the season.

Anna Holcomb (16 points, six rebounds), Montana McBirney (11 points, six assists, three steals) and Amber Jones (10 points, five rebounds) carried the Raiders to the overtime win.

Notes: NQ hosted Duxbury HS on Tuesday... The team will on Friday at Scituate HS. Game time is set for 6:30 p.m.

Record Stands At 3-3 Overall

Old & Young Leading Quincy Presidents

By SEAN BRENNAN

This winter's Quincy Presidents girls' basketball team is a combination of returning starters and up-and-coming underclassmen, and this diverse and talented mix is already providing the program with victories now while laying the foundation for potential dominance in the very near future.

The Presidents (3-3 overall as of 1/4/10) brought back starters in seniors Julia Yee (guard), Leslie Campbell (forward), Colleen Tobin (forward) and Olivia Berry (forward) along with junior Kori Sorensen (guard). These experienced varsity players have already helped Quincy to wins over Pembroke, Randolph and Weymouth High Schools.

"We returned the majority of our starters off of last year's team," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch. "All of them have experience playing at the varsity level and they have all been big parts of our early season success."

"Leslie Campbell, a team captain, had a slow start to her year but has come alive during the past couple of games. Colleen Tobin, another captain, has played well and scored 12 points against Weymouth and Olivia Berry and Julia Yee are both players who should provide senior leadership for the team this season.

"Junior Kori Sorensen, our starting point guard, has already had a couple of notable games, including a 17-point fourth quarter against Hanover High School. I am expecting all of them to be productive for us this year."

Joining these five returning upperclassmen are senior Dora Tyson (forward) and junior Christina Cahill (guard). Cahill has made the move up this season from the Presidents' jayvee team.

Quincy's future looks bright because of its talented sophomore core. The sophomore class includes Juli Tomer (second-year guard), Caitlyn Lowry (forward), Nicole Lamie (guard), Kylie McDonald (center/forward) and Maria Berberan.

All five sophomores bring a different element to the court and, according to Bretsch, all of them should help to make the Presidents better this year and in seasons to come.

"We already had a pretty good team, but then you add in these sophomores and we have the potential to be very good now and even better in seasons to come," he said. "Last year, all of them were part of the best freshmen class I have ever had.

"Juli Tomer, who is currently injured, has great potential as a guard, while Caitlyn Lowry has already become our stopper. She has been guarding our opponents' best players and is a tough and aggressive player.

"Nicole Lamie should also have a great future at Quincy. She will be expected to take some of the pressure off of Sorensen at the point guard position; Maria Berberan is a dominant future post-player and is already one of our best defenders and is already our best shot-blocker and Kylie McDonald, a transfer from North Quincy High School, has probably made the biggest impact so far this year. She is coming off the bench and has been very consistent, and has already had a game in which she scored 15 points and had 12 rebounds."

The immediate success of Quincy's sophomore class has not come as a surprise to Bretsch. All five of them were members of the first fifth grade class to come through the (Quincy) Lady Presidents Basketball program, run by QHS boys head coach David Parry. This program is a teaching tool that Bretsch sees as having a continued impact on the quality of players that should continue to come through the high school ranks.

QUINCY'S KORI SORESENSEN is one of five returning starters this season for the Presidents. Sorensen and Quincy are off to 3-3 start this winter, and the present and future of the program is bright due to a talented sophomore class.

"(They) are among the first group of fifth graders to come through the program," Bretsch said. "That program, and the level of basketball skill that these players develop, is so far beyond what most players that age learn. We are now seeing just how much better and more advanced these players are when they come to play at the high school level."

"The impact that these younger players are going to have on the team this year and in the next few years should give us the depth and interchangeable parts that the Quincy High School girls' program has been missing recently."

And depth and talent up-and-down the bench is going to be critical to any success Quincy has playing this season in the Patriot League's Fisher Division. It is a strong league from top-to-bottom and if the Presidents want to get back into the tournament discussion (the team's number one goal), they are going to have to be ready to play their best games every time out on the hardwood.

"One good thing this year is that a lot of the teams in the Patriot League graduated all-stars and we kept our starters," said Bretsch. "It is a challenging league and we are going to have to play our best every time out to be competitive. But we are trying to improve and that includes moving forward defensively and getting more efficient offensively.

"Our goal is to make the tournament. It has been a long dry spell in recent years and we want to get back to that level. We are almost there. Right now is an exciting moment for girls' basketball at Quincy. We are on the cusp of great things."

Notes: QHS was scheduled to play Rockland HS on Tuesday... The team will host Middleboro HS on Friday at 5:15 p.m. at NQHS.

Boys' Team Falls to Pembroke

Q/NQ Girls Swimming/Diving Sinks Pembroke

The Quincy/North Quincy High School women's swimming and diving team (1-2 overall) won 11 of 12 events en route to the team's first victory of the winter season, defeating Pembroke High School, 95-77, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Dec. 22.

Quincy/North Quincy had two swimmers garner a pair of victories in their respective individual events. Freshman Kat O'Connor touched the wall first in both the 200-yard freestyle (2:18.10) and the 100-yard freestyle (1:02.30) while junior Kendra Johnston finished first in the 500-yard freestyle race, clocking a winning time of 5:59.44 and in the 200-yard individual medley with a winning time of 2:30.74. Johnston owns the Quincy High School record in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:25.63.

Quincy/North Quincy also received first and second-place finishes from three other swimmers. Senior captain Hannah Flattery won the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 1:19.41 and she captured second-place in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 1:03.09. Team captain Danielle Urbanus earned a first-place finish in the 50-yard freestyle race with a time of 29.28 and a second-place finish in the 200-yard freestyle event with a time of 2:31.50 and junior Hilary Wong won the 100-yard backstroke race with a time of 1:15.47 and she earned a second-place finish in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:47.54.

Quincy/North Quincy sophomore diver Taryn Urbanus earned a first-place spot, diving in her first meet of the season.

Boys Results

The Quincy/North Quincy High School men's swimming and diving team (0-3 overall) fell to visiting Pembroke High School, 80-47, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Dec. 22.

Senior captain Cian O'Connor won two individual events; he finished first in the 100-yard freestyle race with a time of 1:02.16 and took first-place in the 100-yard backstroke event with a time of 1:18.60. Dylan Roche of Quincy/North Quincy finished in second-place in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:34.66.

In the 400-yard freestyle relay event, anchorman Austin Rowe erased a ten-yard deficit to overcome Pembroke's relay squad to carry Quincy/North Quincy to victory in the event. Quincy/North Quincy's James Lee came-from-behind in the 500-yard freestyle event to finish in third-place with a time of 8:18.62.

Junior Thomas Nigl finished in first-place in the 100-yard backstroke event with a time of 1:53.13.

Both the women and men's Quincy/North Quincy teams were scheduled to swim/dive against Duxbury High School and Silver Lake High School on Tuesday afternoon.

Quincy's Steve Ohlson Part of Successful Westfield State Team

Steve Ohlson, of Quincy, a fullback, played a big role on the 2009 Westfield State football team that finished with a 7-3 record, including victories in its final six games.

Ohlson played in ten games this past season for the Westfield State Owls and rushed for two touchdowns (12 carries for 24 yards).

On offense, Westfield State averaged 20.5 points per game while averaging 172.8 yards per game rushing the ball.

Overall on defense, the Owls were ranked first nationally in NCAA Division III in turnover margin and pass efficiency, and the team was ranked sixth nationally in scoring defense.

Ohlson will return to the Westfield State Owls next fall as a fifth-year senior.

Fallon Ambulance Team Recognized
For Participation In QMC Cancer Walk

Fallon Ambulance Service, the region's largest independent, family-owned ambulance service provider, recently fielded a team that participated in the annual fundraising walk to support the Marie A. Curry Fund, a permanent endowment fund at Quincy Medical Center.

The Fallon Ambulance team was recognized as one of the top fundraising teams for the 2009 event. The Marie A. Curry Fund focuses on encouraging prevention and early detection of cancer and enhancing access to vital cancer screenings and services for uninsured and underinsured men and women. This year's event raised over $160,000.

From 1999 to 2004, Quincy Medical Center and the City of Quincy's Mayor's Commission on Women co-sponsored an annual Marie Curry Walk, raising more than $1 million to support the Marie A. Curry Fund at Quincy Medical Center.

In 2005 the Curry Family and Quincy Medical Center were able to expand the Marie A. Curry Fund's mission to underwrite additional cancer screenings and services to inspire the prevention and early detection of a wider range of cancers. A new Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk was established to support the expanded mission of the Marie A. Curry Fund.

"We are pleased to have fielded a team for this important community fundraising event," said Peter Racicot, Senior Vice President of Fallon Ambulance Company.

"Our staff understands the need for preventative healthcare and proudly supports the work of the Quincy Medical Center in offering this care to people who would not receive these important screenings. We thank the Fallon Team on a job well done."

settle the matter.

Should either of these tests not provide a definite answer, the next step is to obtain material for microscopic examination. That might be done with a very thin needle, with a larger bore needle or with a scalpel. Self-examination is good for discovering a lump. Self-diagnosis is foolish for proclaiming the lump benign or cancerous. You have to let the doctor do that; see your doctor.

Incidentally, it is better to have a breast exam one week after a period. At the time of a menstrual period, many breast lumps enlarge and become tender, and this can make a difficult diagnosis more difficult.

The booklet on breast cancer explains the details of this illness and its treatments. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue - No. 1101W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am a 41-year-old woman, very petite, 5 feet 1 inch tall, and weigh 95 to 105 pounds. I am being bullied about this by my doctors. Have they supersized the height-weight tables to accommodate our increasingly obese population? I am lightweight but have no health problems. Your thoughts are welcome. - L.N.

ANSWER: Your body mass index is 18.9, which puts you in the normal weight category but at its lower end. If you feel healthy and eat a balanced diet, bully those doctors back.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Why Weight To Battle The Bulge

'Tis the season to overindulge.

The problem is many Americans no longer limit their excess to the holidays. Obesity is a growing epidemic in the United States; one that can lead to serious health concerns such as diabetes, high blood pressure and heart disease.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) estimates that 37 percent of adults in Massachusetts are overweight and 22 percent are obese. The epidemic has spread to children as well.

The Massachusetts Public Health Association reports that between 25-30 percent of the state's 10-17-year olds are overweight or obese.

Small Changes =
Big Differences

Most people know that diet and exercise are keys to maintaining a healthy weight, yet according to the CDC, one-in-five Massachusetts adults reported not having had any physical activity in the past month, and only 28 percent say they eat the five daily servings of fruits and vegetables recommended as part of a nutritious diet.

"What seem like simple choices, like smaller portions at mealtime, or adding more fruits and vegetables to one's diet, can result in powerful changes if you stick with them," says Bryce Williams, Director of Prevention & Wellness at Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts. "Studies show that losing five to ten percent of your body weight can often make a noticeable difference in lowering blood pressure and helping with other problems."

Weight Loss Tips

Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts' (BCBSMA) Prevention and Wellness Program offers the following tips to a healthy lifestyle:

- Talk to your Primary Care Provider (PCP) - Before starting any diet or exercise plan, talk to your doctor to better understand your current condition and health status. Your PCP may have recommendations to help you lose weight safely and effectively.

- Develop a plan - Planning is a key to weight loss success. You need to set realistic goals and outline tactics to achieve them. Consider as part of your plan - weekly meal menus, a food diary to track what you eat, and regularly scheduled exercise.

- Eat healthy - Pay attention to the foods you eat and the nutritional value they provide by reading the label. According to the BCBSMA web site www.ahealthyme.com, daily food intake should include: 45-65 percent carbohydrates, 10-35 percent protein and 20-35 percent fats.

- Increase physical activity - Most people cannot lose weight by dieting alone. According to the National Weight Control Registry, 90% of the people who lose weight and keep it off, exercise regularly.

- Track success - Once you have a plan, you need to measure your progress. Weigh yourself regularly, but not everyday. Keep track of what you eat and how much in a food diary, and record how many minutes of exercise you get a day.

- Bounce back - Everyone blows their diet now and then, or skips a day at the gym. The important thing is to get back on track and not get discouraged. A lifelong change not only takes dedication - it takes patience.

Support Programs & Resources

Trying to lose weight alone is a challenge, but there are many resources available to help people lose weight and stay motivated:

- Weight Watchers and Overeaters Anonymous are examples of programs that can help you track your food intake and provide emotional support.

- Nutritional counselors can help you develop a life-long plan to achieve and maintain weight loss; some counselors are just an email away.

- Fitness centers - Physical activity is key to weight loss and a healthy lifestyle, join a gym or your local YMCA. Your city or town may offer exercise programs for little or no cost, check with your local Department of Parks and Recreation.

- Weight loss challenges - a little competition can give you a lot of motivation. Challenge a friend or relative to lose weight. There are also online resources like "The 50 Million Pound Challenge," that encourage people take control of their health.

- Health insurers are important sources of support. Many offer financial incentives for joining fitness centers and weight loss programs. BCBSMA's www.ahealthyme.com devotes an entire section to weight loss providing access to recipes and food like menu planners, food diaries and calorie counters.

BCBSMA's Prevention and Wellness Program started in January 1995 and provides initiatives to promote preventive health to BCBSMA's nearly 3 million members, 2.5 million in Massachusetts.

Is Breast
Lump Cancer

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am 20 and need your help. I felt a lump in my right breast. I told a friend about this, and she said breast cancer never happens to anyone my age. If that's the case, I am relieved. If it's not the case, what should I do? How can you tell a cancer lump from one that isn't cancer? This is on my mind all the time. - L.G.

ANSWER: Breast cancer does happen to young women. It's often said that it does not, but that's misinformation. It's true that breast cancer is more prevalent at older ages and that the risk for it increases the longer a woman lives. So someone your age is less likely to have it, but youth doesn't make you immune to it.

Size, how the lump feels and whether it is tightly fixed in place are some of the qualities that sway a doctor into judging a lump as being cancerous. Cancer lumps are hard. They're firmly anchored to the tissue beneath them; you can't move the lump. Cancer lumps have irregular borders. Frequently, the overlying skin of a cancer lump is drawn down toward it to form a little dimple.

This sounds like it's easy to tell if a lump is or isn't cancer. It's not. If a doctor, after examining the breast, cannot be sure, then he or she usually has the patient come back in a month or two to see if the lump has changed in size. If doubt still exists, an ultrasound in a woman less than 35 and a mammogram in an older woman usually can

While proper posture helps avert back pain and promotes the health of the spine, this doesn't mean we should walk around stiffly upright. Instead, a check of the body's alignment in a full-length mirror should reveal the ears, shoulders, hips, knees, and ankles to be on a straight vertical line. A healthy spine has four built-in curves: the forward curves of the neck and lower back and the backward curves of the center back and sacrum (the section of fixed vertebrae at the bottom of the spine). This natural curvature helps the body absorb shocks far better than a straight and rigidly linear structure. With poor posture, one of the four aforementioned curves becomes exaggerated, threatening the spine's structural integrity.

* Posture is the window to the spine and poor posture can indicate there is a problem with a person's spine and nervous system. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we would like to stress the importance of regular chiropractic care. Fortunately, many can be helped to conquer their pain and live more active lives without the need for drugs or surgery. We believe a continuing schedule of regular chiropractic checkups can help detect, correct, and maintain optimum spinal and nervous system function. You don't have to live with pain. Call us at 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. No matter where you live in Eastern Mass., we can offer you exceptional chiropractic service.

P.S. An assessment of your posture by the chiropractor may help you avoid many of the more common spine problems that arise from poor posture and body mechanics.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

"We are debtors" - Romans 8-12...

In an age when the by-word is "Give me this" or "Give me that," words like "we are debtors" are not popular. Our first reaction is to deny it and say that we have met all our obligations and are not in debt to any man. But when we begin to think on the matter we come to realize that there is not a single moment in our lives when we are not obligated to someone or to something. We were born into a world where for centuries men and women have been laboring to make the burden of life a little lighter for us. Wars have been fought and blood has been shed so that we might have liberty. Churches and organizations have endeavored to foster and nurture the good in men, and through their combined efforts most of the people we meet on life's highway are reasonable and kind. Schools have banished much of our ignorance, and Medical Science has conquered many of our diseases, and for these and countless other blessings "We are debtors."

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) That lower-than-acceptable performance you're getting from others in your group might be the result of miscommunication. If so, correct it before serious problems arise later on.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) An unexpected situation could call for a change of plans. If so, you might feel that this is unfair. But it's best to make the needed adjustments now. There'll be time later for rescheduling.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) The new year brings opportunities you might want to look into. Some might be more interesting than others. But take time to look at all of them before you make any decisions.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) It's a good idea to be careful about expenses until you've worked out that pesky financial problem. You might find it advisable to get some solid advice on how to proceed.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Romance looms large over the Leonine aspect. Single Lions looking for love should find Cupid very cooperative. Paired Cats can expect a renewed closeness in their relationships.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Making contact with a former colleague might not be high on your list of priorities. But it could pay off personally as well as professionally. Avoid bringing up any negatives about the past.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A personal relationship could face added stress because of a situation involving someone close to both of you.

Be supportive and, above all, try to avoid playing the blame game.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You might well find some lingering uncertainties about a decision. If so, take that as a warning that you might not be ready to make that move yet. More study would be in order.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Music is a dominant theme for Sagittarians right now, and it should remind you to make a greater effort to restore some much-needed harmony in that very special relationship.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Although family matters might demand much of the Sea Goat's attention this week, you'll want to try to make time to handle those all-important workplace situations as well.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A recurring unresolved issue might need to be revisited before you can move forward. Consider asking someone familiar with the situation to act as an impartial counselor.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Ignore pressure to make a decision. Keeping your options open is still the wisest course, at least until you're sure you've learned all you need to know about the matter at hand.

BORN THIS WEEK: You're capable of great loyalty to those around you, which is one reason you can count on devotion from friends and family.

COMBINED CHOIR of North Quincy and Quincy High Schools sing "America the Beautiful" at Monday's inauguration ceremony at North Quincy High School. Leading the choirs were directors Timothy Carew (North Quincy High) and Christopher Nicholson (Quincy High School).

Inauguration Ceremony Saves Money, Wins Praise

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Several observers praised Monday's scaled down inauguration at North Quincy High School, citing two major factors: the students and the savings.

"It's great," said Steve Peters, adding, "As long as it was done economically, I'm happy with it."

This year, the venue was simple and unadorned but the city saved some $18,000, according to Chris Walker, chief of staff for Mayor Thomas Koch.

Walker said the savings was due mainly to the location. He estimated the 2008 event cost $30,000 and this year's budget was $12,000.

For others, there was a little wistful longing for those lost days of opulence when they celebrated a mayor's inauguration at the Marriott or the Granite Links Golf Course where chandeliers sparkled and great ballrooms beckoned.

"The kids are doing a great job," said George Knasas who added that it's important to celebrate the event. At this time, though, "We have to scale down things."

Recalling a previous inauguration party at the Marriott, Knasas said, "That was a nice time."

The venue may have been simple but the elegance of the 90 plus young choral members, dressed in heels and suits and white shirts won over observers.

Tim Carew of North Quincy High School and Chris Nicholson of Quincy High School directed the combined chorus.

A student quartet playing the violin quartet and the tunes of the student pianist and soloist, Mike Betson, greeted audience members as they arrived at the school's main entrance.

The theme was red white and blue in half of North Quincy High School's gymnasium where several café tables sported floral arrangements.

Behind a temporary wall, the students cooked and set up refreshments in the other half of the gymnasium which was opened after the ceremony and a d.j. played music for dancers.

For Denise Marinelli, both types of celebration have their place and it's necessary to "consider the times," and the economic problems of the city.

"I like the idea. It's like a community event," said Daniel Hockey, noting that local businesses were involved as well as the Quincy High culinary school.

Hockey said the high school seemed more inviting for residents while his wife said, "It's right that the whole community come together."

Knasas, a former Brain-tree High School Spanish teacher, also, said he enjoyed seeing the different ethnic students singing and working together at the event.

Students served as ushers, waiters and waitresses and volunteered through the student councils of both Quincy and North Quincy High School, the Robotics club, the Business leaders of America and the Interact Club.

The Quincy Fire and Police Department Honor Guards and the North Quincy High School ROTC presented the colors.

Three pastors from local churches offered prayers during the ceremony. Rev. John O'Brien of Sacred Heart Church; Rev. Adolph Wismar of Wollaston Lutheran Church and Rev. Ann Suzedell of Quincy Point Congregational Church offered the prayers.

NQHS PAC Meets Tonight

The North Quincy High School PAC will meet tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. in the school's trophy room.

Principal Earl Metzler, Vice Principal Rob Shaw and a representative from the Guidance Department will give their monthly reports.

Other PAC business will be conducted. The public is welcome to attend.

To Raise Money For Interfaith Social Services 100 Swimmers Expected For John Hancock Plunge Saturday

By JOE REARDON

Frigid temperatures, snow and icy, cold water won't deter hearty participants from stripping down to their bathing suits and taking a wintry swim in Wollaston Beach.

The 4th Annual John Hancock Birthday Plunge is slated for Saturday, Jan. 16 at 11:30 a.m. The three previous frosty plunges have raised a total of $20,000 to benefit Interfaith Social Services. The swimmers gather pledges to support Interfaith, which offers food, counseling and assistance to needy people on the South Shore.

Rick Doane, the executive director of Interfaith, has seen the number of swimmers increase every year and expects more than 100 this time around. "Each year we keep getting more and more people," Doane said. "Anybody can come and do it."

With 350,000 pounds of food distributed last year, Doane would like to see the plunge gather momentum with every year. "Each event we do has to be the most successful," said Doane. "We have to keep up with demand."

The event is always held the Saturday after John

Friday Last Day To Vote Absentee Ballot 31 % Turnout Seen For Special Senate Election Tuesday

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

An estimated 31% of Quincy voters will head to the polls next Tuesday in the special state election for U.S. Senate that features three candidates vying to succeed the late Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

Grabbing most of the headlines and media coverage have been Democrat candidate Martha Coakley, the state's attorney general, and Republican candidate Scott Brown, a state senator from Wrentham.

Coakley was elected state attorney general in 2006. She also served as Middlesex County district attorney for eight years. Brown, a former selectman and assessor from the Town of Wrentham, served as a state representative before being elected state senator in 2004.

The third candidate on next Tuesday's ballot is independent Joseph L. Kennedy. A software developer and executive for information technology firms, Kennedy is not related to the late senior senator nor the Bay State's renowned political family.

Coakley – considered by some political observers as the frontrunner – defeated three candidates in the Democratic primary Dec. 8 to advance to next Tuesday's final election. Brown prevailed over another candidate in the Republican

Koch Signs 'Safety Zone' Ordinance Restricting Sex Offenders

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Mayor Thomas Koch last week signed the City Council's "Safety Zone" ordinance aimed at restricting Level 3 sex offenders from entering libraries, schools, daycare and elderly housing facilities and loitering at parks.

"This law sends a strong message that our community is willing to do everything in its power to protect its citizens from dangerous predators," said Koch.

The mayor's approval represents a first step in limiting sex offenders' access to the city's most vulnerable residents, senior citizens and children, according to the ordinance sponsors, City Council President Kevin Coughlin and Ward 3 Councilor Douglas Gutro.

"Councillors Coughlin and Gutro deserve great credit for their efforts to ensure that our parks, libraries and other public areas are safe and welcoming for all of our residents," Koch said, praising the two councillors who joined him at a signing ceremony.

Coughlin and Gutro believe the ordinance will help protect children and elderly residents from sexual predators, but agree there is more to be done. They had originally sought a more sweeping ordinance covering bans on residential areas.

"We believe that to accomplish at least half that mission was certainly worthwhile," said Coughlin of the decision to limit the ordinance to prohibitions on access and loitering.

Coughlin Appoints New Council Committee Chairmen

City Council President Kevin Coughlin Monday announced his appointments to the council's 14 committees for the 2010-2011 term.

Under Coughlin's plan, the current chairmen of the three major committees, Finance, Ordinance and Oversight will remain in place, led respectively by Councilors John Keenan, Doug Gutro, Ward 5, and Brian McNamee, Ward 6.

All nine councilors serve on the three major committees which analyze and assess budgets and expenditures, all changes to the city legal codes, and scrutinize municipal actions and proposals.

McNamee will continue as Vice Chair of the Finance Committee while Councilor Michael McFarland was selected as vice chairman of the Ordinance Committee and Councilor John Keenan, vice chairman of the Oversight Committee. McFarland and Keenan replace former Ward 1 Councilor Leo Kelly and Coughlin.

Both of the new councilors, Margaret Laforest, Ward 1, and Brian Palmucci, Ward 4 will lead council committees in the next term.

Laforest will steer the Environmental & Public Health Committee with Vice Chairman Doug Gutro, Ward 5 and Palmucci will head the Public Safety Committee with Vice Chairman Daniel Raymond, Ward 2.

Coughlin's appointments for the remaining ten committees follow with each chairman identified first and vice-chair listed second. Downtown & Economic Growth, Gutro and McFarland; Education, McFarland and Palmucci; Library and Historic Places, Councilor Joseph Finn and Laforest

Also, Park & Recreation, McFarland and Raymond; Public Works, Finn and McNamee; Rules, McNamee and Keenan; Senior Citizens, Raymond and Gutro; Veterans Services, Keenan and Finn and Housing, Finn and Raymond.

Parent-School Partnership Key To Reducing Bullying

By JOE REARDON

Quincy Public Schools are taking a proactive approach against bullying in the classrooms and through the Internet with various measures to address the problems. Guidance counselors from three schools and the city's director of student services presented the programs at Monday night's Parent's Council Meeting.

"We've implemented programs before anyone else," said Maura Tenaglia, Quincy's Director of Student Services. "It is pretty comprehensive."

Quincy Public Schools' Bullying Policy states "Recognizing that education is an important component of any effort to combat bullying, school-base initiatives that are designed to keep students safe and teach them to act responsibly..."

National statistics of bullying are alarming. Children who engage in the behavior are at risk of dropping out of school while a whopping 60 percent of kids identified as bullies will have further problems within the criminal justice system. Nearly 30 percent of youths in the United States, around 5.7 million, are estimated to be involved in bullying as a bully, a target, or both. Stress due to peer pressure affects 15 percent of students. And most students report feeling uncomfortable when bullying takes place, although 85 percent of bullying takes place in public.

Today's bullies are more likely to be popular with their peers than loners, with those friends encouraging the practice. "The eggheads really support the bullying behavior," said Tenaglia.

Tenaglia stressed the importance of developing a solid partnership between parents and the schools in reducing the problem. "We have to recognize if it is a peer conflict or a bullying issue," said Tenaglia. "We have to get the facts. Sorting that out can be tough."

Bernazzani Elementary School Guidance Counselor Maura Shaughnessy spoke of the elementary interventions that have been implemented in the school. "Kids are learning very effective safety skills," she said.

Kids & Company, which teaches basic safety skills, is taught in the second grade. The children are introduced to learning assertiveness and problem solving skills. Second Step applies to kids from Kindergarten to the fifth grade. Among the social skills used in Second Step are empathy, emotion management, problem solving and cooperation.

Shaughnessy praised the Second Step approach and the success she has seen through its implementation. "It's been a very successful tool for us," she said.

The research-based program aimed at preventing bullying, Steps To Respect, stresses the three Rs of Bullying: Recognize, Refuse and Report. The goal of the program is to empower the students to be part of the solution to help stop the bullying.

"Having those basic social skills go a long way in preventing in bullying," Shaughnessy said.

The program teaches the children there is a big difference between tattling and reporting. "We teach the kids that tattling is trying to get kids in trouble," she said. "Reporting is trying to keep someone safe. The focus is really on prevention."

FANCY THAT!

While white colorless diamonds are always in style, "fancy" (colored) diamonds are currently enjoying a real spike in popularity. When judging the value of "fancies," the same factors that pertain to white diamonds (Color, Cut, Clarity, and Carat weight—the Four Cs) also apply. The first factor to take into consideration is the fancy's basic hue, or color. After that, it's important to assess the diamond's intensity. Taken together, these factors largely determine the worth of a fancy diamond. For instance, yellow and pink fancies are more in demand than orange diamonds and, therefore, more valuable, and an intense yellow or pink diamond is more valuable than its paler counterparts. A good cut maximizes a fancy's sparkle and color intensity.

Every diamond has its own color and characteristics, and no two are exactly alike. Because of this, it is absolutely vital that you choose diamonds and other precious gemstones from a jeweler you know and trust. You'll want a jeweler you can turn to for service and advice in the future, someone who is established in the community with a reputation for integrity and reliability. In the jewelry industry since 1944, we'd be happy to help in all your fine jewelry choices at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. PH: 617-773-3636.

"This is another tool in the toolbox for law enforcement and it states unequivocally to dangerous criminals that they will not be tolerated in our city," said Coughlin.

Gutro called the ordinance "an innovative approach to protecting our most vulnerable citizens from some of the state's most dangerous predators in the public areas..."

However, the ordinance may have some wrinkles that must be ironed out.

Councillor John Keenan questioned the actual clout, and constitutionality of the revised ordinance, while Library Trustees and staff are seeking guidance on enforcement issues.

"Our concern is how this will be enforced," said Ann McLaughlin, Director, Quincy Public Library.

At their regular meeting Monday, Library Trustees agreed to ask the City Solicitor to explain the role of the staff in reporting and enforcing the new ordinance.

"We were a little surprised," Alicia Coletti, Chair of the Trustees, said Monday, referring to the apparent new duties of the library staff.

Complex Issue

"We understand the complexity of the issue," said Coughlin.

Both Koch and Coughlin said the ordinance is "no silver bullet."

The ordinance prohibits Level 3 sex offenders from entering schools, libraries, daycare centers, recreation and elderly housing facilities without prior written authorization, or from loitering within 500 feet of such buildings or parks.

In addition, a bulletin board with photographs of all Level 3 sex offenders registered in the city must be installed at the main entrances of City Hall, police headquarters, the Thomas Crane Library, and the administrative area of every public school and public daycare facility.

The photo postings must also be displayed on the city and police department's official websites. According to recent reports, there are 20 Level 3 sex offenders registered in Quincy.

Level 3 sex offenders are those deemed by the courts to be most likely to re-offend.

Violators of the ordinance would face a non-criminal fine of $150 for a first violation and a non-criminal fine of $300 and notice to parole or probation officers for each additional violation. Under certain circumstances, repeated violations may trigger an arrest under state law.

"This is obviously a complex issue," said Coughlin. "We're not going to be able to identify everyone in the state."

Council Approval

Councillors voted 8-1 to approve the ordinance on Dec. 29, the final meeting of the council's last session.

The ordinance was then sent to the mayor for his approval.

Coughlin and Gutro sought the vote after revising an earlier proposal which included residency restrictions for Level 3 Sex offenders.

The original proposal considered last February would have prohibited Level 3 Sex Offenders from living in certain areas of the city.

At the time, six to eight persons testified in favor of limits on sex offenders. Supporters included Police Detective Lt. Patrick Glynn, Kendall Whittington, Vice President of Eastern Nazarene College and Scott Smith, president of the Parent Teachers Organization, Beechwood Knoll School.

However, some councillors feared that such an ordinance would create a false sense of security and drive Level 3 offenders underground and off the Sex Offender Registry.

Even the revised ordinance offers complications, according to Councillor John Keenan who opposed the motion on Dec. 29.

"The ordinance is unenforceable, possibly unconstitutional, and really does not solve the problem it's intended to solve," Keenan said in explaining his vote Dec. 29 against the ordinance.

"Efforts to protect society (on this issue) have to be addressed at the state level," said Keenan.

Coughlin also believes

the issue should be addressed statewide, "We would prefer that the state take a more comprehensive stance on this issue."

Since state legislators won't address the issue, Coughlin said, "We felt we needed something now."

Enforcement Issues

The library staff is on the front lines in implementing the new ordinance and, for now, they need specific direction.

Staff must now keep an up to date bulletin board with pictures of all Level 3 Sex Offenders living in the city.

"Our concern is how anything like this would be enforced," said Ann McLaughlin, Director of Quincy Public Library, who said staff members do not i.d. patrons entering the libraries.

McLaughlin said that, up until now, the staff has used the library's official "Appropriate Behavior" regulation to monitor activity in the libraries and it has been successful.

"The police have been terrific," McLaughlin said describing their response to staff calls. "We've had great assistance."

"We are certainly happy to make sure the library is safe," said Alicia Coletti, Chair of the Library Trustees, who said the Trustees will invite the city solicitor to their next meeting to explain their duties.

The Trustees, also, want explicit details on their role in administering the new ordinance "so that we'd be on firm ground."

The staff also needs to know, "What are the legal implications?" in reporting a violation or ejecting an offender, according to Coletti who said that a legal review for all would be the most sensible route.

Brian Palmucci's Top Priority: Serving Ward 4 Residents

He's been on the job officially for a little more than a week now and already he's responded to more than 30 inquiries from his constituents.

Welcome to the sometimes hectic and always-on-duty world of being a ward councillor, Brian Palmucci.

And the political newcomer wouldn't have it any other way.

"I've have been receiving and responding to constituent concerns since two days after the November election. I'd say I've responded to or am currently working on 30-plus constituent cases," he says.

Serving the residents of Ward 4 is Palmucci's top priority. He also wants to roll up his sleeves and see firsthand how basic city services are delivered. For instance, he hopes to ride in a snow plow during winter storm and ride along with a police officer during a shift in West or South Quincy. The first-term councillor – who has been appointed chairman of the council's Public Safety Committee by Council President Kevin Coughlin – plans to tour the West Quincy fire station to look at equipment and meet with firefighters, spend a day volunteering at both the Sterling and Lincoln-Hancock Schools, and visit some other city departments.

He met with Sterling Principal Christine Barrett a few days after his swearing in Jan. 4 to see the conditions of the classrooms and how he can work together with school administrators.

"It sounds kind of corny, by I'm more of a man of action than a deep thinker. Getting my hands dirty on the job of our city workers will give me a better understanding than reading a job description or a line-item in the budget," Palmucci explains. "Doing this will also help me understand better the effects of the policy decisions I will be making as a councillor over the next two years."

If you live in Ward 4, there's a very good chance you've already met Brian. He knocked on doors throughout the entire ward four times during the last campaign which he launched in November 2007. He estimates he knocked on 12,000 doors total. And he has the shoe soles to prove it.

"I wore out two pairs of shoes in the process. My wife and I contemplated many things before running for council like time on the campaign trail, and the money we'd have to put into it. Buying two new pairs of shoes was not something we thought of going into it."

The 32-year-old and his wife live at 138 Willard St. He received a B.A. in political science from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and a J.D. from New England School of Law.

Here's a few more things we learned about Brian in this question and answer:

What is the first issue you will be addressing as the new city councillor representing Ward 4?

My first priority as city councillor is constituent services. Providing good constituent service is job number one for a ward councillor and will be my main focus over the next two years. I encourage residents of ward four to contact me with any issues or concerns they have; none are too big or small.

Within days of my election in November, I began receiving constituent calls. I've already been working with constituents on issues ranging from traffic concerns and snow removal to drug abuse prevention and flooding issues. I enjoy helping people and look forward to assisting them with their various concerns.

What are some of the other priorities for you as Ward 4 councillor?

In addition to improving constituent services, I'll work to increase communication with the residents of Ward 4, to keep them informed of important issues and proposed developments throughout the ward. I've already sent out my first ward four e-newsletter and I've set up a twitter account to notify residents of vital information in a rapid manner.

I'll be hosting frequent neighborhood meetings, and when the weather improves I'll continue to door knock and hold coffee hours to keep the lines of communication open. I've already scheduled a neighborhood meeting on a development issue and am planning my first open office hours to give constituents a chance to drop by to discuss their issues or concerns.

You served on the Pembroke School Committee before moving to Quincy. How will your previous public service help you with your duties as ward councillor?

Good schools and safe streets are the hallmark of a strong and vibrant community. I believe that the success of our city rises and falls with our ability to educate all of our children and prepare them for life's challenges.

I know firsthand the difficulties involved in balancing a school budget. Every budgetary decision, no matter how small the amount, has a direct impact on the education received in the classroom. The truest measure of our priorities as a community is evidenced by the school budget. The experience I gained by serving on the school committee will inform my decisions during the budget process. I'll be an advocate, on the city council, on behalf of our public school children.

Do you support a 4-year term for the office of mayor in Quincy? Why or why not?

I don't support a 4-year term for Mayor. I think that shorter terms in office lead to a greater level of accountability and accessibility of elected leaders. The notion that a Mayor shouldn't be bothered with campaigning every two years, going door to door and debating their record, is in my opinion false.

However, I believe this is a decision to be made by the residents of Quincy. The question should be put on the ballot and the peoples' will should dictate whether or not we change our city's charter.

What is the future of the West Quincy billboard – is it here to stay?

I'm cautiously optimistic. While I think it's an uphill battle, there is hope that the billboard will be removed at some point. There are several lawsuits pending that seek the removal of the billboard. Also, the Outdoor Advertising Board, which is the state agency that permits billboards, grants its permits on an annual basis. At any one of those annual re-permitting hearings that board could deny the West Quincy billboard's renewal. It's my hope that future members of the board will not allow this blight to remain.

How would you characterize your political philosophy?

I'm a Democrat. I'm fiscally conservative and socially moderate. But most importantly I'm a pragmatist. I believe when governing, you have to be prepared to make compromises to ensure the best interests of your constituents are protected.

What do you want the residents of Ward 4 to know about you as their ward councillor?

I work for them; I'm always available to help with any issues they may have. I'll always return their emails and phone calls. And I can be reached on my cell phone at 617-824-3945 or at bpalmucci@yahoo.com.

How will you balance your responsibilities as a state prosecutor with your duties as a ward councillor?

I find it very rewarding to prosecute sex offenders on behalf of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. However, my primary responsibility is to the constituents of Ward Four. If ever I feel that my duties as a city councillor are suffering because of my role as a state prosecutor, then I will consider seeking other employment opportunities that would allow me to better serve my ward and city.

What goals do you hope to accomplish over the next two years?

Throughout the campaign, the only promise I made was to do the best job I could in serving the interests of ward four on the city council. I hope to accomplish that by improving communications with residents and responding to their concerns. My primary goal is that each person who contacts me with an issue or concern is treated with respect and knows that I've done my best to help them.

Some of the issues that I've already started addressing and will continue to work on include traffic, road conditions, development in and around Crown Colony, the Cliffwalk II project, and snow removal.

Finish this sentence: "The most important political advice I ever received was . . . and who said it."

From a resident I met while door knocking during the campaign, who told me that if elected I should never forget the people who put me there and the job they've asked me to do. I've taken that advice to heart.

THE LATEST voter registration numbers in Quincy indicate the overall number of registered voters has increased by 156 since November, with all three major affiliations seeing a bump.

Unenrolled registered voters continue to be the biggest voting bloc with 25,384 as of Dec. 30. That's an increase of 130 from the Nov. 18 total of 25,254.

Registered Democrats still rank second in Quincy with 24,741. That's 14 more than the 24,727 listed Nov. 18.

And Republicans get the "bronze" again: third place. As of Dec. 30, there were 5,569 registered GOPers, a slight uptick of 6 over the 5,563 listed Nov. 18.

And if you're wondering what ward has the most registered voters? That would be Ward 6 with 9,672. That's only eight more than Ward 2 which has 9,764 registered voters. The rest of the totals by Ward: 8,776 in Ward 1; 9,304 in Ward 3; 9,492 in Ward 4; and 8,995 in Ward 5.

The precinct with the most registered voters? That distinction goes to Ward 2 Precinct 2 with 2,782. Also medaling were Ward 6 Precinct 3 which gets the silver for second place (2,604 registered voters) and Ward 4 Precinct 3 (bronze – third place) with 2,250. Fourth place is Ward 1 Precinct 4 with 2,122 registered voters.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1924 postcard showing Russell Street in Atlantic looking east towards the ocean. Tirrell Street crosses in the foreground. Much of this section of Atlantic was built up in the early 1920s when Quincy was the fastest growing community in the state. The large, mostly multi-family houses shown here were all new and as can be seen here these new streets were still unpaved. This section of North Quincy, known as The Farms in colonial times, was not part of Quincy when it was incorporated in 1792. It wasn't until 1855 that The Farms, south of the Neponset River, was annexed by Quincy from Dorchester. The name Atlantic came from the Old Colony Railroad's station and was also used by the post office until 1930. It was then changed to North Quincy, which was the name of the new high school. READERS FORUM

Stop 'Socialized Medicine,' Vote Scott Brown

Massachusetts politics, to its detriment, has put every person's health at serious risk.

We are in the dying days of our current health care system. The system that allows us to retain our God-given freedom to manage our own health care in consultation with our chosen doctor.

Shortly after the continued deal-making behind closed doors by the Obama administration and the Democrat-controlled U.S. Senate and House in Washington, our current system will be replaced.

As a result, America's virtuous belief in the "worth of each individual person" will no longer exist.

Health care will not be provided based on the "worth of each individual person," but on "the individual person's worth to the state."

Health care is to be rationed based on age - infants through the middle-teen years will have diminished health care - the younger the child, the less health care.

People, aged from high school through the early 40s, will have the best chance for health care, but not necessarily guaranteed so.

People beyond the early 40s will have diminishing health care, the older, the less health care.

Section 3403 of the U.S. Senate version of health care includes a sub-section that describes an "Independent Medicare Advisory Board" that recommends who gets what health care, when, where, and how. This "Board" is the foundation of "single-payer (government) health care, a.k.a. socialized medicine - like the horror stories from Canada and Europe!

The "Independent Medicare Advisory Board" - "advisory" is a political word used to imply the "Board" has little authority. Beware, this "Board" is the foundation of "socialized medicine" in the United States.

In fact, there is a sub-section that tightens the limits on changing any "Board" recommendations. Also, the "Board" sub-section is never to be amended, nor repealed. (This is an attempt by Mr. Obama, the U.S. Senate, and the House to establish "socialized medicine." This stipulation also appears to be unconstitutional.)

Massachusetts is directly responsible for this predicament.

The Massachusetts Democrats on Beacon Hill abolished the, then, legal right of a Republican governor to appoint a replacement for Senator Kerry in the event he were elected President in 2004.

However, in 2009, the Massachusetts Democrats reversed their 2004 political chicanery by reinstituting the law that they abolished. Now, in 2009, there is a Democrat governor to appoint a replacement for the late Sen. Ted Kennedy's Senate seat.

Why didn't they wait until the Jan. 19, 2010 special election to fill that seat? The answer is the Massachusetts Democrats on Beacon Hill are obviously in favor of passing this horrid Washington Health Care bill into law.

So the Democrat Governor, Deval Patrick, appoints Paul Kirk as temporary Senator for Massachusetts.

What happened when Sen. Paul Kirk went to Washington?

Sen. Kirk provided the 60th vote to overcome the U.S. Senate's filibuster by the Republicans who were trying to stop this awful health care bill.

I respectfully ask you to vote on Jan. 19, 2010 and consider voting for Scott Brown who is on your side. He is against this terrible bill, and for lowering taxes, not increasing them as even this health care bill will do. Your alternative is another politician who puts party over your best interests.

Please vote Scott Brown. Bill Kerrigan 826 Willard St.

Hospital Rates To Increase Feb. 1

By FRANK McCAULEY

A general increase in rates at the Quincy City Hospital, effective Feb. 1 was announced by Dr. Joseph J. Leone, director, following a conference of hospital and city officials. The increase will not affect patients admitted before the first of next month.

In general, the rates of ward patients and private and semi-private room patients with "facilities" are increased while the rates of patients in private and semi-private rooms without such facilities remain the same. The facilities, it was explained, consist of a toilet.

The new rates for private rooms with facilities are $23 and $26 daily for Quincy residents and non-residents, respectively, as against old rates of $22 and $25.

The new rates for private rooms without facilities are $22 and $25, unchanged.

Dr. Leone said, "These new rates are reasonable and compare favorably with existing rates of other area hospitals."

WEST OF TRACKS WON'T PREVENT A CUT IN DEBT, MAYOR ESTIMATES

Quincy can handle the major phases of the "West of the Tracks" project this year in addition to the normal capital outlay programs and, at the same time reduce its bonded debt by $250,000, Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa estimated.

Mayor Della Chiesa said that the city this year could handle essentially all phases of the big "West of the Tracks" project except the construction of the proposed 1,095 car parking area, and carry on other capital projects and still reduce the city's debt by $224,000. (Editor's note: The "West of the Tracks" project encompassed the taking of land on the west side of the tracks adjacent to Granite Street by eminent domain and building a municipal metered parking area. The project bogged down due to substantial opposition and was never implemented.)

ENC A Cappella Choir Performs Monday At Carnegie Hall

Eastern Nazarene College's A Cappella Choir soon will accomplish a feat of which many professional musicians only dream, when the 50-member group performs at New York City's legendary Carnegie Hall.

ENC's choir will join several other choral groups from across the nation Monday, Jan. 18 in performing a special tribute concert in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Selections to be performed include Handel's "Zadok the Priest" and Mozart's "Mass in C Major."

"The Carnegie experience is very special for our ENC students, who hail from many states and countries, and are pursuing a variety of majors," said Choir Director Timothy Shetler, who noted that while in New York the choir will also perform at several area churches. "Music and ministry bring our diverse backgrounds together in this special January tour to New York — a tour which celebrates the ideals of Martin Luther King, Jr."

Shetler noted this month's performance follows the A Cappella Choir's first Carnegie Hall appearance, which occurred last spring. And A Cappella choir members are looking forward to their return engagement.

"For any performer, singing at Carnegie Hall is a great honor," said Coventry, RI native Katrina Abraham, an ENC senior majoring in music education. "For a student, singing at such a prestigious venue is an incredibly rewarding experience."

Joshua Hollett, a sophomore Chemistry major from Saugus, agreed.

"Singing at Carnegie Hall is not only aesthetically and aurally pleasing, but also exciting because of the rich history the hall possesses," he said. "Some of the finest bands and choirs in the world have performed there, and it is such an honor to perform on the same stage as they did."

Founded in 1938, ENC's A Cappella Choir has toured the world, with members performing in such locations as Austria, Germany, Romania and at Boston's own Jordan Hall. The choir's next international tour is scheduled for January 2011, when the group's honors ensemble, the ENC Chamber Singers, will perform throughout Scandinavia.

For ticket information, call 212/247-7800 or visit www.carnegiehall.org.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Alma's Pineapple, Cheesecake Squares

I was attending a Sunday birthday celebration at my daughter Nancy and husband Jed's home and Jed's mom Alma brought a delicious pineapple cheesecake dessert. It's a little longer than most of my recipes, but well worth the effort.

PINEAPPLE CHEESECAKE BARS

For the crust

2 cups flour

2/3-cup margarine (softened)

1/2 up almonds (toasted and finely chopped)

1/2 cup powdered sugar

Mix all the ingredients together until crumbly. Press firmly and evenly in a 13x9-baking pan. Bake in a 350 oven. Do not overcook.

Filling

Start with a 20-ounce can of Dole's crushed pineapple)

2-8 ounce packages cream cheese (softened)

1/2 cup sugar

2 eggs

2/3 cup Dole's unsweetened pineapple juice.

Beat cream cheese in medium bowl until smooth and fluffy. Add the sugar and the eggs. Stir in the pineapple juice.

Pour the cream cheese mixture over the hot crust. Bake in a 350 degree oven just until center is set (takes about 20 minutes). Cool completely.

Topping

1/4 cup flour

1/4 cup sugar

1 cup of pineapple juice (from the 20 ounce can)

1/2 cup whipping cream

Mix flour, sugar and pineapple juice, and heat to boiling stirring constantly. Remove from heat, and fold in the drained crushed pineapple. Cool completely Beat the 1/2 cup of the whipping cream until stiff and fold it into the pineapple mixture. Spread the topping carefully over the dessert. Cover loosely and refrigerate until smooth. (About 4 hours).

Cut into squares. Garnish with pineapple chunks, mint leaves and maraschino cherries, if desired.

Benefits Pediatric Patient Assistance Fund Avery Glennon Christmas Party Raises $22,000 For Dana-Farber Cancer Institute

Over $22,000 was recently raised at the First Annual Avery Glennon Christmas Party to Benefit the Jimmy Fund. All proceeds directly benefit the Pediatric Patient Assistance Fund at The Jimmy Fund/Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

The fundraiser was organized by Sean and Jo-Anne (Hidalgo) Glennon in honor of their six-year old daughter, Avery. Shortly before her first birthday, Avery was diagnosed with optic glioma, a cancerous tumor that is growing around the optic nerve in her brain. Avery endured 13 months of chemotherapy, which has successfully shrunk the tumor by 30 percent.

Throughout this ordeal, The Jimmy Fund/Dana-Farber Cancer Institute has been extremely supportive of The Glennon Family and they wanted to do something to "pay it forward" for other families who find themselves in a similar situation. They planned the Christmas party in less than six weeks, with a goal of raising $10,000.

"The response was overwhelming. People came to the party that evening and reached into their hearts and into their pockets," said Sean Glennon. "To be able to present the Jimmy Fund with a check for more than double the amount we had hoped to raise is truly amazing and heartwarming."

Every year the Jimmy Fund Clinic cares for over 400 patients, many of whom remain on treatment for two years or more. Many of those families experience financial hardship as a result of their child's illness. The Pediatric Patient Assistance Fund provides financial support to these families, including direct and immediate assistance via prepaid gift cards (gas, grocery, CVS, and more).

"This incredibly generous donation to the Pediatric Patient Assistance Fund at Dana-Farber will provide much needed relief to hundreds of Jimmy Fund Clinic patients and their families," said Joe Chabot, Pediatric Resource Program Manager and Manager of the Pediatric Patient Assistance Fund. "This tremendous gift will have an immediate and positive effect on the lives of our patients and their families. Thank you for helping us to help our patients and their families."

primary to secure a spot on Tuesday's ballot.

Recent polls suggest the Senate race may be tightening between Coakley and Brown. And Tuesday's results may be much closer than some prognosticators had predicted after the Dec. 8 primary. Coakley's vote total was more than double Brown's in the primaries.

Turnout could be a major factor in next Tuesday's election, according to some political observers. One key to victory could be who wins the vast majority of the unenrolled voters who historically do not vote in party primaries.

In the Dec. 8 primary, Coakley polled 311,548 votes. The other Democrat candidates and their vote totals were: Cong. Michael Capuano (185,157), Alan Khazei (89,284) and Stephen Pagliuca (80,294). Some 668,926 voters cast ballots in the Democrat primary.

In the Republican primary, Brown polled 146,057 while his only opponent, Jack E. Robinson received 17,344. A total of 165,007 votes were cast in the Republican contest.

Statewide, voter turnout was about 20 percent in the Dec. 8 primaries. There are 4,140,827 registered voters in Massachusetts, according to the Secretary of State's Election Division.

Locally, the election appears to be generating more interest from the electorate. As of Tuesday, the city's Election Department had processed requests for 728 absentee ballots. That number was 594 on Monday, a jump of 134 in just one day.

Those planning to request an absentee ballot are reminded that tomorrow (Friday) at noon is the deadline to do so. Municipal offices – including City Hall – will be closed next Monday due to the Martin Luther King, Jr. Birthday holiday.

The number of absentee ballots is one indication of likely voter turnout, according to local election officials. City Clerk Joseph Shea predicts voter turnout next Tuesday will be 31 percent of the city's 56,003 registered voters. That means 17,360 are expected to cast ballots; the other 38,642 voters may stay home.

Still, a 31 percent voter turnout would be about eight points higher than the Dec. 8 primary election when a mere 23 percent of Quincy voters went to the polls.

Some 573 Quincy voters cast absentee ballot in the Dec. 8 primaries.

Election observers also point out the correlation between the number of absentee ballots and voter turnout in the city election last November.

Headlined by the Thomas Koch – William Phelan mayoral rematch, some 1,133 absentee ballots were cast. Turnout for that election was approximately 44 percent.

State officials have indicated the primary and final election will cost the state approximately $8 million. Here in Quincy, next Tuesday's election will cost the

A Letter Of Support From The Chairman Of The Quincy Democratic City Committee

Coakley: 'A Leader Who Has Gotten Results'

As Chairman of the Quincy Democratic City Committee I urge all Quincy residents to support Martha Coakley for U.S. Senate because she is a leader who has gotten results.

As our Attorney General, Martha Coakley has worked to protect homeowners from predatory lenders, and senior citizens from scam artists trying to milk them out of their savings.

She started the Cyber Crime Initiative to curtail identity theft and protect children from online sexual predators. She has also won major settlements for the Commonwealth's taxpayers from Big Dig contractors, pharmaceutical companies, and Wall Street banks engaging in unscrupulous business practices that have put our safety, health, and economic well-being at risk.

MARTHA COAKLEY

In short, Martha Coakley gets results.

When Martha gets to the U.S. Senate, she will work to get our economy back on track through job creation and stronger regulation of Wall Street.

She'll support tax cuts that help middle class families and small businesses, not the wealthiest Americans. She'll take steps to lower health care costs and expand access. And she'll promote energy reforms that meet our needs while protecting our environment.

You can learn more about Martha on her website - www.marthacoakley.com - and I hope you will join me in voting for Martha Coakley for U.S. Senate in the Jan. 19th special election.

A Letter Of Support From The Chairman Of The Quincy Republican City Committee

Brown: 'Right Skills, Experience To Best Represent Mass.'

On Tuesday, Jan. 19, Massachusetts voters will go to the polls to elect a new U.S. senator.

The timing couldn't be more critical: In the past year, as millions of Americans have lost their jobs, their homes, or both, Congress has adopted an "anything goes" mentality, handing out billion-dollar bailouts to big business and displaying the smug, self-satisfied arrogance that invariably results from one-party rule.

It's time to send Washington a wake-up call. And that wake-up call is named Scott Brown.

A comparison of the two U.S. Senate candidates shows that on the most pressing issues facing our state and our nation, Scott Brown possesses the right combination of skills and experience to best represent the people of Massachusetts. Consider the following:

The economy: During his three terms as a state representative and three subsequent terms as a state senator, Scott Brown has championed fiscal restraint, consistently proposing and supporting legislation that would reduce spending and lower taxes. Martha Coakley possesses no legislative experience whatsoever. She has, however, signaled her support for Washington's current spending spree, pledging to rubber-stamp a host of new trillion-dollar programs.

National security: In the past two weeks alone, America has witnessed a failed airplane bombing attempt, an attack in Afghanistan that killed eight CIA agents and growing instability in the terrorist stronghold of Yemen. Clearly, terrorism is not going away anytime soon. As a 30-year member of the Massachusetts National Guard, Lt. Colonel Scott Brown would bring invaluable experience and insight to Washington during this time of global instability.

Martha Coakley has no military or foreign policy experience. Perhaps that's why she supports extending American legal protections to terrorists, including providing them with taxpayer-funded attorneys and trying them in civilian courts as ordinary criminal defendants – as if their heinous acts were no more serious than shoplifting or burglary. Lt. Colonel Scott Brown recognizes these terrorists for what they are: enemy combatants who should rightly fall under military justice – not benefit from the judicial system of the nation they have sworn to destroy.

Health care: Martha Coakley's campaign website states, "As Senator, Martha will work to ensure that any health care reform package preserves and strengthens Medicare...." How, then, does she explain her support for the current health care bill, which would cut half-a-trillion dollars from Medicare? While Coakley has pledged to support this bloated boondoggle of a bill – despite already flip-flopping on abortion funding – Scott Brown understands that this misguided bill will produce the same results seen in other nations with socialized medicine: higher taxes, reduced access to medical treatments, longer waiting periods, reduced quality of care and less choice for the consumer.

Independence: Scott Brown has a long record of being an independent voice for his constituents. From proposing legislation to reform the public pension system to strengthening the state's sex offender laws, Brown has never shied away from tackling tough issues, at times breaking ranks with his party to do what he believes is right. Martha Coakley? From her initial kid-glove handling of the clergy abuse scandal to her reluctance to pursue corruption charges against fellow Democrats like dis-

Daughter – And American Idol Finalist – Ayla Performs

U.S. Senate Candidate Brown Visits 1000 Southern Artery

Residents at Quincy's 1000 Southern Artery senior complex recently enjoyed a special holiday treat, when American Idol finalist Ayla Brown performed a brief concert at a holiday reception for her father, state senator and U.S. Senate candidate Scott Brown.

Currently a senior at Boston College, Ayla Brown took time out from her college break to join her father on the campaign trail, offering seniors a bit of holiday cheer while her father discussed the more serious issues facing Massachusetts and America, including taxes and health care.

"If you care about Medicare and the half a trillion-dollar-cut Congress plans to make to Medicare to fund this proposed health care bill, you need to vote on Jan. 19," Brown told attendees.

"The choice in this election is very clear: If you want someone who will go down to Washington and vote in lockstep with Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi to cut Medicare, raise taxes and increase government spending, then vote for my opponent. If you want someone who will be an independent vote and a voice for the citizens of Massachusetts, vote for me."

Former Mayor Francis X. McCauley, who introduced Brown at the event, noted that the special election to fill the Senate seat formerly held by the late Sen. Edward Kennedy holds significance not only for Massachusetts residents, but for the entire country. Currently, McCauley said, Senate Democrats have the 60 votes they need to prevent a filibuster and limit debate on important issues.

"If Scott Brown is elected Jan. 19, he would be the 41st vote that could stop damaging legislation like this proposed health care bill from being passed against the wishes of the American people," McCauley said.

Currently serving his third term in the state Senate, Brown previously served as a state representative and a Wrentham selectman. A 30-year member of the Massachusetts National Guard, he holds the rank of Lt. Colonel in the Judge Advocate Generals Corps.

As McCauley Sees It

Election Of Scott Brown To U.S. Senate 'Is Vital'

By FRANCIS MCCAULEY

The upcoming election (Tuesday, Jan. 19) between Republican nominee, State Sen. Scott Brown and Democratic nominee Attorney General Martha Coakley has nationwide implications.

The winner will fill the seat of the late Sen. Ted Kennedy who was first elected way back in 1962.

Due to a special rule governing the United States Senate it takes 60 affirmative votes to advance legislation to the Senate floor for disposition.

At present, Democrats hold 58 seats while the Republicans hold 40 seats. The two Independents in the Senate, Joe Lieberman of Connecticut and Bernie Sanders of Vermont, vote with the Democrats on procedural issues.

This coalition of Democrats and Independents produced the necessary 60 votes which allowed by the passage of the so-called "Health Care" legislation.

This legislation – a monstrosity containing over 2,000 pages – will have to be reconciled with the legislation that already passed in the U.S. House of Representatives.

The bill will cut one-half of a TRILLION dollars from Medicare funding at a time when more and more citizens are reaching Medicare eligibility age!

Had state Sen. Scott Brown been in the Senate the Democrats would not have been able to bring the legislation to the Senate floor for action.

Other onerous legislation is in the pipeline, most noticeably the infamous "Cap and Trade" legislation which according to President Obama himself, will lead to huge increases in our heating and other utility bills.

The addition of Scott Brown to the U.S. Senate as the 41st Republican Senator will prevent bad legislation from reaching the Senate floor!

I strongly urge the election of state Sen. Scott Brown to the United States Senate on Tuesday, Jan. 19.

(Francis X. McCauley served eight years as the mayor of Quincy from 1982 to 1989).

Brown: 'Right Skills, Experience To Best Represent Massachusetts'

graced state Sen. Dianne Wilkerson, Coakley has time and again put party allegiance and political expediency before principle and public service.

That's troubling. For, ultimately, the choice for U.S. Senator comes down to this: With 10 congressmen and two senators, Massachusetts citizens have 12 individuals representing them in Congress. Currently, all 12 vote in lock-step, supporting the policies of a Democratic Party that has veered so sharply to the left that it has cast aside many lifelong Democrats and alienated moderate Unenrolled voters.

As Jan. 19 approaches, voters should ask themselves: Does Massachusetts really need another elected official who will blindly follow the dictates of Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi? Or should we elect Scott Brown, and have at least one experienced, independent-minded person in Congress who's looking out for us?

To Washington's status quo, that would be a wake-up call indeed.

Quincy Republicans To Caucus Jan. 23

The Quincy Republican City Committee will hold a caucus Saturday, Jan. 23 at 10 a.m. in the second floor community room at Roche Brothers Supermarket, 101 Falls Blvd., Quincy.

At the caucus, delegates to the 2010 Massachusetts Republican State Convention will be elected.

In case of inclement weather, the snow date/time for the delegate election is 7 p.m. Tuesday, Jan. 26.

Delegates from each of the city's six wards will be elected to the convention. Any Quincy resident who was a registered Republican as of Dec. 1 is eligible to be a delegate.

Delegates must be a resident of the ward and city in which they are selected. While prospective delegates need not be present at the caucus to be elected, only current members of the Republican City Committee who are in attendance may vote for delegates.

"We're looking forward to the upcoming caucus and convention as we continue to rebuild the Massachusetts Republican party from the grassroots up," said Jennifer Logue, chairman of the Quincy Republican City Committee.

"Voters have had enough of the overspending and corruption caused by one-party rule on Beacon Hill, and the Massachusetts GOP is looking forward to offering voters a true choice in 2010," Logue added.

The 2010 Massachusetts Republican State Convention will be held April 17 at Worcester's DCU Center. The convention will serve to nominate Republican candidates for statewide office while showcasing the party's commitment to lowering taxes and protecting middle-class families, Logue said.

MORE FOR YOU HERE AT HOME

Coffee Break Café

Coffee Break Café (CBC) in North Quincy is conveniently located on the corner of East Squantum Street and Atlantic Street, inside of Richard's Market.

Quincy residents Jenn and Donny Ormond opened Coffee Break Café's first location in Quincy almost 14 years ago to fill the void for good specialty coffee and superior customer service. Their philosophy was simple: coffee is like wine or cheese; once you begin to appreciate what higher quality tastes like, it is hard to go back to the lower grade coffee that can be purchased anywhere.

They opened the third location in North Quincy in June of 2007 because there wasn't any specialty coffee in the North Quincy area and Richard's Market was a beautiful spot to not only pick up a quick latte and bagel but also a gallon of milk, loaf of bread and a bottle of wine.

Coffee Break is best known for its iced coffee, the sugar is always melted and mixed and all flavors are served 7 days a week year round. Espresso based drinks are a close second in popularity to iced coffee. Always hand made, CBC uses real chocolate and ooey gooey caramel in their drinks, stirred by hand and all shots are properly extracted by hand on the spot. Winter time favorites are CBC's hot cocoa's and right now we are featuring a peanut butter cocoa made with real peanut butter, also a spicy cocoa, and pumpkin cocoa topped with whipped cream or marshmallows.

Coffee Break has community events monthly, free story-time for the kids, open mic night, local art made by high school kids and monthly specials. Coffee Break Café has three locations in Quincy and one in Braintree. Although hours may vary, weekdays they are open at 5:30 a.m. and close at 9 p.m. (6a.m. opening on weekends). They only close one day per year and that is Christmas day. Check out CBC at www.coffeebreakcafe.net of the student against bullies is the focus and the message that the school is a safe haven for the students is stressed. "The have a clear message that Atlantic is a safe place," said Guidance Counselor Lauren Riggs.

Atlantic uses the M.A.R.C. (Massachusetts Aggression Reduction Center) approach to face the bullying. Founded by Dr. Elizabeth Englander, a professor of psychology at Bridgewater State College, an expert in the field. M.A.R.C. services are in the area of bully prevention, cyber bully prevention and education and violence prevention.

Cyber bullying has become a major problem nationally, rising from 42 to 60-percent from 2006 to 2009. Cyber bullying is attractive to kids because they can bully others under the cloak of anonymity. Parents must be vigilant in monitoring their children's online behavior.

"They feel empowered because it's not a face-to-face confrontation," said Riggs.

Cyber bullying at the Broad Meadow School has been the main focus because school officials have seen so much of it. "It can involve kids who would never bully face to face," said Guidance Counselor Jackie Smith. "Of course it (cyber bullying) is brought in the school because it involves the kids. There's no guilt involved because you don't see the victim. They're losing a sense of sensitivity."

Smith said that boys tend to target their friends online and bully just as a joke. When girls choose to bully, they target former friends. And more likely than not, they cyber bully when they're angry to begin with.

Safety lessons are reiterated when it comes to who the kids commiserate with when they are online. They're taught never to give out passwords or to reveal information about themselves. "There really is no such thing as privacy on the internet," Smith said.

Tenaglia stressed the importance of interaction and open dialogue between the parents and school officials. "If a parent doesn't trust us, a child isn't going to trust us," she said.

Koch Calls It 'Unconstitutional, Ill-Equipped' Mayor Files Stern Objection To Charter School

Mayor Thomas Koch has delivered a stern argument to state authorities against a proposed public charter school in Quincy seeking to serve Asian Americans, calling it unconstitutional and dramatically ill equipped in educational expertise.

The Hanlin International Academy Charter School is seeking permission from the State to open the first-ever charter school in Quincy. But local officials have roundly criticized the proposal for trying to segregate the City's burgeoning Asian population from the Quincy Public Schools and sapping state education funds from the City in the process.

In a letter from the Koch Administration to the State Department of Education, the City states that the school's stated plans to market to what it calls "New Americans" confirm that it is targeting admissions based on a particular class and race of individuals. That, the Koch Administration states, is a clear violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution's 14th Amendment.

"It is clear that public funding cannot support institutions which engage in the sort of racial targeting that Hanlin does-reason alone to deny it a charter," the letter states.

While Hanlin officials have denied that assertion, City leaders state that the school's application flatly ignores the success rate of the growing Asian American community within the school system and the numerous programs that have been created to serve that community.

A number of officials, including Superintendent Richard DeCristofaro and every locally elected official, have voiced similar opposition, stating in broad terms that Hanlin officials have failed to identify the need for such a school, which is a critical component for winning a state charter.

In the most recent letter, the Koch Administration goes further. Not only does the school fail to cite a specific need for the school, its arguments say "virtually nothing about the mission, operation, or policies of the proposed school," relying instead on a general philosophic mantra. The opposition letter states the school has provided virtually no information on how it will expand or enhance programs already offered by Quincy Public Schools, noting that its organizers lack educational experience and other attributes viewed as important in the state application process.

"Hanlin offers certain philosophic and esoteric reasons for its proposed existence, but is required under your regulations to do much more," the letter stated.

The opposition letter comes at the end of a public process that included a hearing on the school proposal last month in Quincy, where supporters and opponents voiced their arguments.

The Hanlin International Academy Charter School's final application is now under review by the State Department of Education.

Martin Luther King, Jr. Celebration Monday

Quincy's Human Rights Commission invites the public to celebrate the birth, life and work of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. at its 14th annual breakfast Monday, Jan. 18.

The breakfast will take place at North Quincy High School's cafeteria from 9 to 11 a.m. (Enter by the front doors.)

Speaker will be Malcolm S. Medley, chairman, Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination

(MCAD). His topic is "Living the Dream Within Our Own Lives."

This year's honorees are Beth Ann Strollo, executive director of Quincy Community Action Program (QCAP) and Rev. David Wooster, director of the Quincy Crisis Center.

Entertainment will include the Germantown Neighborhood Center Chorus.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $6 for seniors (60 and above) and children (5 and under). They are available from Thomas Fabrizio, director of Constituent Services at City Hall (617-376-1123) and Commission members.

For more information, contact Ann Yeomans, Commission chairperson, at 617-773-5306.

PUFFY PAWS

Even a healthy person can experience swollen feet. This common condition can be brought on by numerous underlying factors. Feet may swell slightly during the day since gravity pulls the fluids of the body downward. Pregnancy can cause veins to leak blood into the tissues, resulting in swelling. Trauma to the feet, including sprains and breaks, will ordinarily cause a large amount of swelling. Malnutrition or an excessive use of salt can result in swollen feet. Elevation of the legs is the most important treatment to reduce swelling. The level of the legs should be above the level of the heart. Avoid standing in one place for too long, monitor your sodium intake, and drink plenty of water.

When you first visit our offices because you are experiencing swollen feet, pain, or other unusual symptoms, we'll conduct a physical exam and diagnostic tests to determine your foot problem. Once a diagnosis is made, we'll develop a treatment plan designed to relieve your discomfort and/or correct the problem. We offer a wide range of technologically advanced podiatric treatments and procedures at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER, including offering relief from the painful condition of hyperpronation through HyProCure™, an ankle stabilizing procedure that utilizes a titanium implant to eliminate the discomfort caused by excessive motion of the foot and ankle. Please call us for an appointment at 781-986-3668. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221.

HINT: You can treat swollen feet on your own, but seek professional assistance if you want reassurance that what you are doing is the best approach.

Insurance STRATEGIES

by Jim Sullivan

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

Spend time growing your business, not worrying about insurance. Please call JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY at 800-818-8600 to schedule an insurance consultation. As independent business people who have been providing over 53 years of excellent service, we know that daily operations must run smoothly. We offer a complete range of business insurance, including key-person insurance. We work with you to ensure that in the event of interrupted services, you and your company are protected, that any financial losses are minimized, and that your operations continue as soon as possible. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.

While "no person is irreplaceable" dictum perpetuates the belief that a business can survive the loss of any individual, some people are "key" individuals whose death or disability could prove to be disastrous for the business. With this in mind, businesses are offered "key man" insurance, which is a life and/or disability policy with the business as beneficiary. In the event that there were three founding members of a business with equal influence and responsibility for their business' success, the key man policy could have a "first to die" provision. Upon the death of one of the three founding members, the policy would pay benefits to the company but would no longer apply to the remaining two founding members.

NOTE: Key man insurance may be needed to buy out the interests of a deceased partner's family to ensure the continuity of the company.

Real Estate

According To Register Of Deeds Annual Activity Report 'Healthy Increase' In Real Estate Sales For 2009

The Registry of Deeds took in 172,700 total documents in 2009, a healthy increase of 22% over recordings in 2008, according to the 2009 annual real estate activity report released by Norfolk County Register of Deeds William O'Donnell.

Total dollar volume of real estate sales in Norfolk County for the annual period from January to December, 2009 settled at just over $4.1 billion, a decrease of 9% from January to December, 2008.

The total number of 13,967 deeds recorded during 2009 was up slightly, increasing by 1%. This slight increase in the number of deeds recorded is potential evidence that the slowest point of the market has been reached.

The price decline year to year was moderate with the average sale price of deeds over $1,000 (both residential and commercial properties) coming in at $505,992.04, down 6% from the average price in 2008.

There was, however, positive news on the foreclosure front as Norfolk County experienced a decline of 26% in the number of recorded foreclosure deeds. Mortgage recording activity was up sharply rising 37% on a year to year basis with 40,307 new mortgages being recorded, although total mortgage value for 2009 stood at $26.7 billion, a decline of 8% from 2008.

"These numbers are likely the result of homeowner refinancing to take advantage of lower mortgage rates combined with an ongoing weakness in the commercial sector offering fewer opportunities for larger business loans," O'Donnell said.

"It is important to note that this total mortgage value amount does not necessarily represent the true value of indebtedness as some are mortgages which may be recorded multiple times against different parcels of land, are refinances simply replacing existing debt or are recorded to secure equity credit lines which may not be drawn to their capacity," O'Donnell added.

The Norfolk County Registry of Deeds, 649 High St., Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County.

The Registry is the basic resource for homeowners, title examiners, mortgage lenders, municipalities and others with a need for secure, accurate, accessible land record information. The Registry land records back to the founding of Norfolk County in 1793 are available for online viewing. The Registry's online index is available from 1937 forward and continues to expand to include earlier records.

To contact the Registry of Deeds, call 781-461-6101.

Neighborhood Housing Services Homebuyer Workshop Jan. 25, 27

Secure Cup Hooks

Q. My roommate and I put those screw-in cup hooks underneath one of our kitchen cabinets, and the first time we hung coffee mugs from them, the hooks pulled right out of the wood and the cups all smashed. How do you set hooks so they don't fall out. Also, how can we fix the damage to the cabinet bottom before the landlord sees it? —Katie J., via email

A. From your description, the cabinet bottom is most likely a lightweight wood, maybe particle board, and perhaps a bit old and slightly deteriorated. Cup-hook screws are similar to wood screws, with sharp points and slightly wider screws in order to "bite" securely into the wood. However, between the particle board and heavy mugs, the screws just didn't have enough to hold onto.

Try two things next time: larger hooks and a solid piece of wood. Most cabinets have a brace along the bottom made of solid wood. Pre-drill a hole that is smaller in diameter than the diameter of the hook screw, then screw the hook into place.

Another method, if your cups must absolutely hang in a certain place and direction, is to add support to the particle board. Again, do this by selecting larger hooks with longer screws. Purchase a strip of solid wood at least one-half inch thick and about 2 inches longer than the planned line of cup hooks. Put this strip inside the cabinet on the "top side" of the base. Measure the distance from the middle of the wood strip to the outside edge of the cabinet. Mark this same distance on the underside of the cabinet (this will help you locate the screws correctly). Mark the spot where you want each hook. Last, tack down the wood strip with a dot of wood or white glue on either end, just so it doesn't slide around.

Have a partner hold the wood strip in place as you pre-drill the screw holes, going through the cabinet base and into the strip in one straight shot. Continue to support the wood strip as you screw the hooks through the base and into the wood strip.

This support strip will allow you to hang most coffee mugs or other lightweight items. I don't recommend hanging heavy items like pots and pans from the hooks, as the added weight could bring the cabinet base down.

HOME TIP: Add another item to your toolkit: earplugs. HEAROS, an earplug manufacturer, recommends all DIYers using power tools wear them to protect from hearing loss.

QMC Recognizes Top Teams For Cancer Walk

With donations continuing to come in well after last September's event, the final tally for the 2009 Quincy Medical Center (QMC) Cancer Walk topped $175,000.

To recognize their extraordinary efforts, QMC announces the top fundraising teams for the 12th annual QMC Cancer Walk.

Together, these teams along, with hundreds of other local individuals, teams and businesses, support the hospital's efforts to provide essential cancer screening, education and equipment for local residents.

"Even in tough economic times and less than favorable weather conditions, our Walk supporters come through for us year after year," said Janice Sullivan, vice president of External Affairs

"We are extremely grateful to each and every one of them."

The top corporate fundraising teams for the 2009 QMC Cancer Walk were: first place - Team Arbella (Arbella Insurance, Quincy); second place - Gallagher Globe Trotters (Gallagher Benefit Insurance Services, Braintree); and third place - Fallon Ambulance Service, Quincy. The top family/friends teams were: first place - Positive

QMC Offers Training For Chinese, Vietnamese Medical Interpreter Graduates

Fifteen local Chinese and Vietnamese speaking students recently received medical interpreter certificates after successfully completing a 45-Hour Medical Interpreter Training Course and examination in Asian languages offered by Quincy Medical Center (QMC) and Culturesmart, Inc. To better prepare them for careers in medical interpretation, graduates of the QMC-Culturesmart program have the opportunity to obtain 40 hours of additional hands-on training working with professional medical interpreters at QMC.

Medical interpreters are important members of a healthcare team, assisting with clear and accurate communication between the doctor and medical team and the patient. This includes an in-depth knowledge and understanding of key medical terms, knowledge of how to translate the names of commonly used medical instruments, medicines and procedures and explain them to the patient, and the ability to convey the appropriate meanings from one party to the other.

SENIOR NEWS LINE

by Matilda Charles

Helping Your Brain by Helping Others

Seniors are always told to keep busy. Exercise keeps us more physically fit. Getting out among friends keeps us socially active and aware. And now we're told that helping others can help our brains.

A recent study determined that volunteering in a social setting netted dual results: Others were helped, and the seniors made gains in brain function.

In this particular study, volunteers age 60 and over were recruited to teach literacy and other skills to children in kindergarten through third grade. After two weeks of training, they worked alongside other volunteers for 15 hours per week for six months. The volunteers had brain MRIs before the study started, and follow-up MRIs when the study was finished.

At the end of the study, the volunteers showed increases in brain activity and cognitive function, which proved the point the researchers were trying to make: Specific activities can increase "plasticity" in the brain and "prevent or halt age-vulnerable cognitive and neurological declines."

This is more than a case of "use it or lose it," as the skills were not those we would necessarily use every day. The specific skills the volunteers used in this program were problem solving, literacy support, conflict resolution and being able to work through distractions.

One thing that came out of the study was that it's important that the activities have meaning. Researchers had a high level of participants who stayed with the program, likely because it was rewarding and stimulating to work with the children.

If we're to use social volunteering as a means of strengthening our own brain functioning, we need to decide what things matter to us -- literacy, poverty, animal welfare, soup kitchen and food bank, transportation for cancer or dialysis patients, tree planting, Habitat for Humanity -- and focus on those activities.

What matters the most to you?

"Heart Disease" Covers Lots of Territory

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Can you give me a good definition of "heart disease"? I find the phrase very confusing. -A.T.

ANSWER: It's confusing because it covers so much territory and deals with so many different conditions. The most prevalent form of heart disease is coronary (heart) artery disease - CAD, a buildup of cholesterol, fat and other materials in the arteries that supply the heart with blood. The buildup obstructs blood flow to the heart muscle, and the result is angina (chest pain) with partial obstruction, or a heart attack with complete obstruction.

Heart-valve disease constitutes another group of heart ailments. The heart has four valves that keep blood moving from one heart chamber to the next and prevent backflow of blood into the chamber it just left. A valve can narrow and present an obstacle to the free flow of blood, or it can leak and allow backflow of blood. For example, a narrowed mitral heart valve is mitral stenosis; a leaky mitral heart valve is mitral regurgitation.

The heart is a muscle. Diseases that directly affect the heart muscle are cardiomyopathies ("cardio" is heart; "myo," muscle; "pathy," disease). Some are inherited. Others develop on their own. This is another large group of heart diseases.

Congestive heart failure arises when the heart becomes such a weak pump that blood backs up into the lungs, causing shortness of breath, and into the rest of the body, causing ankle and feet swelling. Congestive heart failure may result from any of the above three heart conditions.

Heartbeat disturbances - arrhythmias (uh-RITH-me-uhs) - come about from a misfiring of the inborn electrical activity of the heart. Atrial fibrillation is a common arrhythmia. Arrhythmias often disturb heart pumping and lead to heart malfunction.

Congenital heart disease is another group of heart diseases. They are defects in the way the heart formed during embryonic and fetal development. Holes in the partitions that separate the heart chambers are examples of congenital heart disease.

Congestive heart failure, a common consequence of heart disease, is discussed at length in the pamphlet on that topic. Readers can order a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue - No. 103W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am very worried about my 68-year-old boyfriend. He has type 2 diabetes. He eats sugar without control - cakes, ice cream, regular soda pop. Most of the time, his sugar is over 300, sometimes over 480. He takes medicine for his diabetes, so he thinks he can eat whatever he wants. What can happen? -G.A.

ANSWER: You have justification to be worried. So does your boyfriend. Uncontrolled diabetes leads to artery hardening, strokes, heart attacks, nerve damage, kidney failure and blindness. Medicine is only a part of the treatment. Diet is the other part. He must limit his total daily carbohydrates, not just sugar. Carbohydrates are starches and sugars. The only way he'll come to grips with this is to talk to a dietitian or a certified diabetes counselor. He should do so quickly.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

SEEING RED!

A dentist may be likely to provide a natural redhead with a bit more attention than blondes and brunettes might receive. The reason behind this special treatment rests with the fact that redheads seem to have a genetic disposition to be nervous about visiting the dentist. In fact, research in recent years shows that redheads tend to be less responsive to local pain-blockers and may require larger doses of Novocaine to get the same amount of relief that a blonde or brunette would get with regular doses. More recent research shows that the red hair that results from variations in the melanocortin-1 receptor (MC1R) gene, which helps determine pigmentation, may also play a role in processing pain, anxiety, and fear.

As today's column recommends, we pay special attention to those with naturally red hair, and adjust accordingly. We feel a deep responsibility and commitment to provide you the very best care with state-of-the-art technology. Good dental health is no accident. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. Please call 671-479-6220 to schedule an appointment for high quality dental care. Let us help you keep your teeth for a lifetime. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Patients with any fear - or anxiety-related issues are strongly urged to speak with the dentist about their concerns and work out a treatment plan that addresses and allays those worries.

ONE HIT TOO MANY?

As the National Football League begins its own investigations of the potential long-term effects surrounding concussions suffered by its players, experts have been forced to admit they know very little about the long-term risks of concussions suffered by America's high school football players. According to some estimates, every year as many as one in ten high school football players suffers a concussion, and there have been no studies that systematically determine what effect these traumatic brain injuries might have a decade after they are suffered. One study of retired professional football players found that having three or more concussions was associated with a heightened risk of mild cognitive impairment after age

Win Over Hanover Kicked Off Week

Red Raiders Steadily Improving Their Game

By SEAN BRENNAN

At the halfway point of the season, the North Quincy Red Raiders are in position to make a run at a tournament berth. The Raiders (4-6 overall) have played three Patriot League games since defeating Quincy High School (61-59) in the third-place game of the John Adams Classic on Dec. 28; North Quincy lost to Duxbury and Scituate High School, but started off this week with an impressive victory over Hanover High School.

For a team looking to get back to winning games, the 49-36 victory over Hanover was a good way to kick start that mission. North Quincy was scheduled to play Middleboro HS yesterday (Jan. 13) and Quincy HS on Friday (7 p.m., NQHS).

"We are finally back to being healthy," said NQHS head coach Kevin Barrett on Tuesday. "Against Middleboro we should, for the first time all season, be able to start our preseason starting five. I am excited to see how this plays out."

"To finally have our full compliment of players during practice and games should give us a boost as we move into the second-half of our schedule. At 4-6 overall through ten games we aren't where we really want to be, but we do have a chance this week to get back to .500."

In the Raiders' win over Hanover, the team displayed its best defensive effort of the year. With a lockdown effort on the defensive side of the court, senior captains Johnathan Coates and Mike Stanton led North Quincy offensively. Coates dropped 17 points on Hanover and Stanton finished with 16. The senior duo seems to be clicking at the right time and their effort is trickling down to the rest of the roster.

"These guys are our senior captains and they are playing that role real well right now for us," added Barrett. "Stanton is playing well on both sides of the court. He is consistently grabbing 12-14 rebounds a game and scoring between 15 and 20 points. That kind of productivity has been huge for us."

"Coates has been great all year scoring points for us, but he has continued to improve on defense, and that is something that we have been preaching to him, and he has responded. His defensive game has given him more confidence and seeing him take six charges over the last few games has been encouraging."

"The way Stanton and Coates have been playing really improves the rest of the team. It compliments the younger players on the team and with key players coming back from injuries, we should only get better over the second-half of the season."

With Stanton and Coates, along with seniors Matt Jayne and Terrence Staley, playing with a steady confidence, junior Mike Morrison and sophomores Tim Liuzzo and Matt Costa have also provided North Quincy with much-needed production.

"Our veterans have helped the underclassmen improve," said Barrett. "And they are responding. We got Timmy Liuzzo back after the Christmas break and he has played well over the last three games. Mike Morrison has been steady all year and he has given us a big boost, scoring points and playing good defense."

SENIOR CAPTAIN MIKE STANTON (#12) and the rest of the North Quincy Red Raiders will square off against city rival Quincy High School on Friday night. The game will be the second time this winter the two schools have played each other; North Quincy defeated Quincy, 61-59, in the third-place game of the John Adams Classic back in December.

"And Matt Costa, our backup point guard, has been playing well. It is good to see the younger players step up in big moments of games."

Against Hanover, a team that handed Patriot League powerhouse Rockland HS its first league loss last week, North Quincy got six points from Liuzzo.

The Raiders, before beating Hanover, had lost consecutive league games to Scituate and Duxbury. Against Scituate, Coates led all scorers with 20 points. Stanton finished with 17 and Morrison (seven points) and Liuzzo (five points) also contributed in the losing effort.

Versus Duxbury HS, a 59-40 loss, North Quincy fell behind 23-2 before battling back to play the Dragons even the rest of the game. Coates (eight points), Stanton (six points) and Li-uzzo (six points) led the way for the Raiders on offense.

"The losses to Duxbury and Scituate and the win over Hanover has put us in a position now where we have to win six more games to make the tournament," said Barrett. "It would be great to get back to .500. If we can take care of business against Middleboro and Quincy, which will not be easy, later this week, we can get to 6-6

QRD Announces Girls Soccer Skills Program

The Quincy Recreation Department announced this week that it is once again conducting an eight-week Soccer Skills Program for girls as part of its evening recreation gym program.

This program, according to Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, will feature activities and instruction to improve the fundamental soccer skills of each youngster; the participants will also take part in mini-games.

The program is offered on Monday nights starting Jan. 25 and there are two separate sessions. The girls Grades 5-7 program will be held from 6-7 p.m. at Broad Meadows Middle School and the girls Grades 8-11 will be held from 7:30-9 p.m. at the same location.

Don Martin, head girls' soccer coach at QHS, will direct the program. Members of the QRD staff will assist Martin. Registration will be taken on the first night of the program and it will be limited; after the registration period, participants will begin their first night of training.

All participants are required to wear sneakers and appropriate gym attire.

The program is set to conclude on March 22 and there will be no program on Presidents Day (Feb. 15).

For additional information, please call the QRD at 617-376-1394 or go online to www.QuincyRec.com.

Q/NQ Girls Track Drops Decision to Silver Lake HS

The Quincy/North Quincy girls' track team lost its third straight Patriot League meet, 79-21, to Silver Lake Regional High School.

Even in defeat, Q/NQ had several highlight performances. Junior Erica Brady continued her undefeated year by winning the 1000-meter race in a state-qualifying time of 3:17.8. Freshman Rose Bennett scored in three events. She won the high jump (4'7"), took second-place in the long jump (13'06") and finished in third-place in the hurdles (10.91, personal best).

Other scorers included Jaclyn Scuzzarella (third in one-mile, 6:43.4), Mary Schwartz (third in 1000-meters, 3:21.1), Lia Bonoli (second in 600-meters, 1:58.6), Danielle Paschal (third in 300-meters, 50.0) and Si-Han Huang (third in shot put, 24'06").

Q/NQ raced against Duxbury HS on Wednesday at the Reggie Lewis Track Center and the freshmen-sophomore runners will participate in the Paul Davey Invitational at Franklin HS on Jan. 18.

The team will compete in its final Patriot League meet on Jan. 20 against Randolph HS.

"The team continues to train hard and slowly improve," said Q/NQ head coach Geoff Hennessy. "Now that vacation is over we can get some consistency in training. I am positive more good things are on the way for our kids that can't be evidenced by the win-loss column."

Six City Champions Crowned

QRD, Quincy Lodge Of Elks Hold Annual 'Hoop Shoot' Competition

The Quincy Recreation Department, in partnership with the Quincy Lodge of Elks #943, crowned six city champions during the first stage of the annual Elks National Free Throw competition.

The six winners are champions in three different age categories and included Colin Evans, a six-time winner and Kayleen Lenihan, a four-time winner, both of whom, along with the four other champions will next compete in the District Hoop Shoot Event on Jan. 23 at Marshfield High School.

The other 2009-2010 City Champions included Bridget McDermott and Ryan Mele in the 8-9-year old age group; Angela McDonald in the 12-13-year old age group and Quinlan Evans in the 10-11-year old age group.

In this nationwide competition, over three million boys and girls are involved in the first level of shooting. This competition includes shooting 25 free throws with the best shooters moving onto the next round.

Quincy Lodge of Elks Hoop Shoot Chairman Ed Miller and QRD Director

Barry J. Welch presented the trophies to all of the champions and the finalists at the Quincy City Championship.

"The free throw contest is just one example of the involvement of the Quincy Elks reaching into the community to contribute to the quality of life of youth growing up in Quincy," said Welch about the partnership the QRD has with the Quincy Lodge of Elks. "We are always thankful of their generosity."

The runners-up in each age category received second-place trophies. These finalists included Abigail Hanly and Colin McGrath in the 8-9-year old age group; Nina McDonald and David Leuchte in the 10-11-year old age group and Lauren Gambon and Brendan McDonald in the 12-13-year old age group.

Third-place trophies were awarded to Nora Comerford and AJ Nelson in the 8-9-year old age group; Bridget Durgin and Garrett McMorrow in the 10-11-year old age group and Jack Fisher in the 12-13-year old age group.

Other participants who won their local gym contests included Lydia Chan, Allison Karam and Molly Mullally in the girls 8-9-year old age group; Tyler Griffin, Owen Smyth, Colin Keneavy, Jon MacDonald, Ryan Kelson, Frank West, and Kevin Keenan in the boys 8-9-year old age group; Liana Cunningham, Danielle O'Driscoll, Lexi Richards, Maureen Vali, and Carolyn Schaff in the girls 10-11-year old age group; Spencer Smith, Nicholas Maberry, William Phelan, Chris Mann, Henry McBride, Chris Gomez, Jack Quinn, and Nathan Bock in the boys 10-11-year old age group; Rael Gillespie and Juane Ruan in the girls 12-13-year old age group and Joey Dwyer, Chris Situ, Alex Linskey, Cameron McHugh, Zach Dangora, John Ryan, Brendan Ho, Timmy Murphy, Aidan Smith, and Josh Helfrich in the boys 12-13-year old age group.

In addition to his praise of the Quincy Lodge of Elks, Welch credited his Quincy Recreation Department leaders, who supervised the event at each of the Center Championship's 13 different schools, along with the finalists.

Fundraiser for 2010 World Championships Set for Feb. 6

Quincy's Billy Allen Repeats As National Champion

Quincy's Billy Allen, the 2009 American Powerboat Association (APBA) National Points Champion in the highly competitive 250cc hydroplane class, is planning a Mid-Winter Rock & Blues Jam to benefit his 2010 U.S. A-Team's world championship run.

The fundraiser is set for Saturday, Feb. 6 from 8 p.m. until midnight at the Quincy Elks, 254 Quarry Street. Tickets are $20 per person and the event will feature live music and dancing. You can get additional information by visiting www.usateam.webs.com or by calling 781-775-9290.

In 2009, Allen, powering his 13-foot plywood/Kevlar hull, "Miss July," competed in 12 separate races and earned 3835 points to capture the Gilbert Peterman Memorial Award (which he will receive in a ceremony on Jan. 31 in Seattle, WA). Each of the 12 races consisted of three heats of four laps on a one-mile oval watered track.

In the 2009 season-opener on May 16 in Standish,

Maine, Allen captured a hard-fought win over Mike Schmidt of Durham, CT. Allen and Schmidt would trade the national points lead throughout the 2009 season. On June 9-10, on Lake DePue in DePue, Illinois in the two-day US Title Series, Allen established a firm grip on the national points lead as he captured a first and third-place finish against a field of 20 of the fastest 250cc hydros in the country.

Allen's domestic racing season was interrupted when he took a break from the US/APBA circuit to captain the U.S. A-Team, the Quincy based international arm of Billy Allen's racing organization, at the Union of International Motorboating (UIM) World Championships in Europe. During this trip, Allen competed in two world championship events, the OSY-400 class in Poland and the 125cc alcohol class in Estonia, where he took home a sixth-place finish out of 40 registered racers from 23 countries; the highest finish by a America in Europe in decades.

"I have never felt more proud than I did representing the United States at this international competition," Allen said.

The trip to Europe, though exciting and a great learning experience for the U.S. A-team team caused Allen to miss the July 10-11 events at West Thompson Dam in CT. Schmidt dominated the 250cc hydro classes, retaking the national points lead from Allen.

Allen finished a disappointing tenth at the US Nationals on July 25, but following a late-season tear, which included winning at the Merrimack River Run in Haverhill on Aug. 22-23; finishing first, second and third at the Lock Haven Race (Penn.) over Labor Day weekend and winning on Watson's Pond Aug. 30, Allen recaptured the national points lead over Schmidt.

In the final race of the season on Oct. 10-11 in Jesup, GA, a race that featured nine of the fastest 250cc hydros in the US, Allen took first-place in the event's first race, assuring himself of a national title.

"It was a long season and the race for the title came right down to the wire," Allen said. "It was kind of nerve-wracking, but a lot of fun to win it all in the last race of the season."

In discussing is plans for the off-season, Allen said,

"I would like to get back to the Worlds, so right now it's all about raising enough money to get there. We're planning a fundraiser with several live bands at the Quincy Elks on Feb. 6, and we are aggressively pursuing corporate sponsors."

The Feb. 6 1st Annual Mid-Winter Rock & Jam fundraising event featuring Jake Allen and Riff Raff will take place at the Quincy Elks Lodge on Quarry St.

If you would like to purchase advanced tickets to Billy Allen's Rock & Roll Blues Jam fundraiser, please make checks payable to US A-Team, 143 Parke Avenue, Quincy, MA 02170.

overall and that would be pretty good seeing as we have not really been healthy this year.

"Every team in the Patriot League can beat anyone on any given night. There is a ton of parity in the league. Every time you check the box scores in the paper you are seeing teams knocking off each other; everyone seems to come to play in this league and that gives us hope that if we can put it all together, if we can remain healthy than we can make a run at the postseason.

"This is a huge stretch of games for us and if we want to reach our team goal of making the tournament we are going to need to play our best."

Notes: The North Quincy-Quincy game will tip-off at 7 p.m. on Friday in the NQHS gym. The Raiders are the away team... North will travel to Pembroke HS on Jan. 22 before hosting Rockland HS (Jan. 29) and Hingham HS (Feb. 1)... The Raiders end the season with away games against Whitman-Hanson (Feb. 3), Silver Lake (Feb. 5) and Scituate (Feb. 11). A home game versus Duxbury (Feb. 9) closes out the schedule.

QUINCY'S OLIVIA BERRY (#42) and the rest of the Presidents will host the North Quincy Red Raiders this Friday at 5:15 p.m. at NQHS in the one-and-only game between the two city high schools this winter. The girls' game will be followed by a game between the North Quincy and Quincy boys' team, which is set to start at 7 p.m.

Taryn Urbanus Sets School Diving Record

Q/NQ Boys Team Earns First Victory in Pool

The Quincy/North High School boys' swimming/diving team (1-4 overall) collected their first victory of the winter by edging Silver Lake Regional High School, 41-40. The team lost to Duxbury HS, 49-32, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Jan. 5.

Duxbury HS downed Silver Lake HS, 47-34.

Q/NQ's James Lee swam the 100-yard breaststroke in a time of 1:35.31 in the meet's second-to-last event.

Q/NQ and Silver were tied after the 500 freestyle, but Q/NQ's senior Dylan Roche (1:36.34) and junior Austin Rowe (1:41.44) finished second and third, respectively in the 100-yard backstroke, lifting Q/NQ to the one-point win.

Q/NQ hosted Hanover and Rockland High School on Tuesday and are scheduled to compete against Middleboro HS today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m. at the Lincoln Hancock Pool.

Girls Swimming/Diving
Taryn Urbanus bettered her own six-dive school record to lead the Q/NQ girls swimming and diving team (2-3 overall) to a victory over Silver Lake High School, 50-39, while slipping to Duxbury High School, 43-57, a tri-meet at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Jan. 5.

Duxbury defeated Silver Lake, 56-37.

Urbanus' third dive, a forward, two-and-one-half somersault, tick position, which garnered a seven and six-and-one-half from the judges, helped to complete the sophomore's first-place and set the new school mark in that event.

Junior captain Kendra Johnston (1:19.90) and sophomore Jessica O'Donovan (1:21.54) finished one-two in the 100-yard backstroke event. Johnston finished in second-place (2:31.78) in the 200-yard individual medley while senior Hannah Flattery finished third with a time of 2:40.09.

Flattery also finished in third-place in the 100-yard butterfly (1:22.59) just behind teammate Hillary Wong who swam 1:18.16 for second-place.

The girls' team will swim/dive against Middleboro HS today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m. at the Lincoln Hancock Pool.

Campbell's Three-Pointer Lifts Quincy

Presidents Beat SL In A Thriller, 54-52

A gallant second-half comeback was capped off with a game-winning three pointer as the Quincy Presidents rallied from 13 points down at halftime against Silver Lake High School on Monday to win, 54-52.

In the end, Quincy (5-4 overall, 4-2 in Patriot League) stunned the Lakers (6-3 overall). Senior forward Leslie Campbell (nine points) buried the three-pointer that won the game. Her shot came with seven seconds left in regulation.

"It's a really exciting win for us," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch. "We feel like we are getting better all the time and it is nice to prove it against a successful team."

Sophomore center Kiley McDonald scored eight of Quincy's 14 fourth quarter points and finished with 12 points overall while junior point guard Kori Sorensen scored 13 points.

Silver Lake's Courtney Yost led all scorers with 26 points.

The Presidents are scheduled to host North Quincy High School on Friday. The game will start at 5:15 and will be played at the NQHS gym.

Notes: Quincy is set to play a non-league game on Jan. 18 at NQHS against Plymouth South; the team will travel to Whitman-Hanson HS on Jan. 20 and will host Scituate HS on Jan. 22... The Presidents, on Jan. 25, will travel to Duxbury HS; the team will host consecutive home games against Hingham HS (Jan. 29) and Pembroke HS (Feb. 1) before hitting the road for games with Hanover HS (Feb. 3) and Randolph HS (Feb. 5)... Quincy ends the season with a home game against Rockland HS (Feb. 9) and an away game at Middleboro HS (Feb. 11).

Record Stands At 1-9 Overall

Red Raiders Enduring Tough Stretch

A tough stretch of Patriot League games has put a damper on the North Quincy girls' basketball team's hopes of making it back into post-season play this winter. North Quincy (1-9 overall, 0-6 in the Patriot League) has dropped five straight games to Braintree, Brockton, Duxbury, Scituate and Hanover High School; the team's next game is set for Friday against Quincy High School (5:15 p.m., NQHS Gym).

North Quincy vs. Hanover

The Red Raiders, despite a career-high 15-point effort from senior Devon McKay (15 points, three steals) and a 11 point-nine rebound game from junior Montana McBirney, lost to Hanover HS, 57-38, on Monday.

Senior captain Cara Murtagh chipped in with five points and five steals.

North Quincy vs. Scituate

North Quincy lost to Scituate HS, 61-35, on Jan. 8 in a Patriot League contest.

Team captains Cara Murtagh (seven points, four rebounds) and Montana McBirney (nine points, six rebounds) led the Raiders in scoring.

The loss dropped North's overall record to 1-8.

North Quincy vs. Duxbury

Montana McBirney's double-double (14 points, ten rebounds) was not enough to push the Red Raiders past Duxbury HS on Jan. 5.

North Quincy lost the game, 47-35.

Senior forward Anna Holcomb scored 12 points and senior captain Cara Murtagh finished with 13 rebounds and seven assists.

Notes: The Red Raiders hosted Middleboro HS on Jan. 13... North Quincy will tip-off against Quincy HS on Friday. This game is the one-and-only matchup between the city's two high schools this season. The game is scheduled to begin at 5:15 p.m... The team's next game will be on Jan. 22 at home versus Pembroke HS... North Quincy closes out the month with an away game against Rockland HS on Jan. 29.

Register For 31st Annual PMC Jan. 19

Registration for the 31st annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC) will begin on Jan. 19. The event, which is open to 5,500 cyclists, will be held on August 7-18 and registration can be done by visiting www.pmc.org.

The goal of this year's bike is to raise $31 million for the Jimmy Fund, which supports cancer research and treatment at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Over the past 30 years, the PMC has raised $270 million for the Jimmy Fund.

Interested riders may register for one of ten routes, including four one-day and six two-day, which range from 47 to 190 miles. This event has a national reputation for being a beautiful and well-supported ride; thousands of riders return year-after-year to participate in the event and cyclists hail from 36 states and eight countries.

Minimum fundraising requirements range from $1,000 to $4,200, depending on the route chosen; registration cost is $125 or $170 depending upon the route chosen. Support services, meals, and overnight accommodations will be provided.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, Jan. 2, at approximately 4 p.m., Officers Michael Sullivan, Lane Watkins and Tim Simmons were dispatched to Fayette Street for an "unknown disturbance." Communications reported to responding units that a third party caller stated that he could hear yelling and crying in the apartment.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, the Officers were met by a female, who appeared upset but stated that, "Everything is fine now." She (the victim) told the Officers that her boyfriend just assaulted her, took her pocketbook and fled prior to the Police arriving. The victim and her boyfriend were guests of a friend at this address since New Year's Eve. She stated that she and her boyfriend were both sleeping on the couch when he asked her for some cigarettes.

When she told her boyfriend she didn't have any, he became enraged, searched her pocketbook and then got into a tug-of-war over the pocketbook. The victim said that her boyfriend then pushed her away with such force that the shoulder strap to the pocketbook broke away, causing her to fall back onto the couch.

She said that she did not suffer any injuries but was six months pregnant. The victim was urged to have EMT's look at her, but she refused any treatment. Officers Watkins and Simmons checked the surrounding area for the suspect with negative results. The victim was told to call the Police if the suspect returned.

At approximately 5:30 p.m., dispatch received a call from the victim that the suspect came back, returned the pocketbook and was now walking towards Newport Avenue. Officers located the suspect in the parking lot of Wendy's Restaurant on Newport Avenue and placed him into custody without incident. The suspect, a 21-year old Brockton resident, was charged with "Assault and Battery (domestic violence)." Nice Work!

ANOTHER JOB WELL DONE... On Friday, January 1, 2010, at approximately 3:45 p.m., Officers Dan Parisi, Michael Flaherty and James Parisi were dispatched to 999 Southern Artery on a report of four individuals breaking into motor vehicles. The suspects were described as wearing dark clothing and carrying a backpack.

Officer James Parisi arrived on scene moments later and observed four youths wearing dark hoodies and carrying a backpack walking on the sidewalk in front of 999 Southern Artery. While Officers James Parisi and Michael Flaherty questioned the youths, Quincy Police Dispatch informed the Officers that the caller was still on the line stating that the suspects being held by the Police left an item on the trunk on a green Buick.

Officer Dan Parisi located a large cup/change holder sitting on the car, and then met with the caller who said that it was hers. She said that her cousin heard glass breaking, looked outside and saw a window of a vehicle broken with youths inside her vehicle.

The Officers brought the witnesses to the suspects, who confirmed that they were the ones who broke into their car. The four suspects, ages 15 thru 17 and from Quincy, were placed under arrest for "Breaking and Entering Into a Motor Vehicle in the Nighttime With Intent to Commit a Felony and Receiving Stolen Property."

One suspect was also charged with "Possession of Class D (marijuana) and Destroying Real or Personal Property." One suspect had a pocketknife and another possessed a box cutter. In addition to the particular car, other vehicles had been entered. Tires on construction equipment had also been slashed.

Nice Work!

RECENT SCAM: A citizen reports that he had a recorded message on his cell phone from a female stating that his ATM card had been shut off due to overuse. Instructions in the message were to press #1 and enter his ATM number. Beware of callers asking for any personal information using a ruse.

Entries in the Quincy Police Hot Spots are compiled and submitted by the Quincy Police Department. They are published by The Quincy Sun as a public service to make local residents more aware of any crime activity in their neighborhood.

Questions concerning the Hot Spots list should be directed to Crime Prevention Officer Lt. Dan Minton, 617-745-5719.

DON MCCARTHY
Managing DirectorA THOUGHT
FOR THE WEEK

Every Election, whether presidential or local, someone is pleading to people to get out and vote. Newspapers, radio and TV, candidates and many others urge voters to exercise one of their basic freedoms - to vote for the candidates and the issues of their choice. It has been that two out of every five eligible citizens fail to cast their ballots on Election Day...

The Ballot Box is the best instrument to attack the problems of our time - whether it be in a presidential election or local election. The Ballot Box is the best way to legislate or clarify issues.

The right to vote is the most fundamental of all our rights because the behavior and performance of officeholders, at every level of government, is dictated by the knowledge that periodically they must come before the bar of public opinion in the polling booths. The caliber of men and women in public life is a direct reflection of the wisdom and judgment exercised by the voters.

Let us all get out and vote on Election Day... We are, indeed, privileged to have the right to vote as we wish...

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Use that Arian charm to help make a difficult workplace transition easier for everyone. News about a long-awaited decision can be confusing. Don't jump to conclusions.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Although you might well be tempted to be more extravagant than you should be at this time, I'm betting you'll let your sensible Bovine instinct guide you toward moderation.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) An opportunity for travel could come with some problems regarding travel companions and other matters. So be sure you read all the fine print before you start packing.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Make an effort to complete your usual workplace tasks before volunteering for extra duty. Scrambling to catch up later on could create some resentment among your colleagues.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A financial matter could have you rethinking your current spending plans. You might want to re-check your budget to see where you can cut back on expenses until the situation improves.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) One way to make your case for that promotion you've been hoping for might be to put your planning skills to work in helping to shape up a project that got out of hand. Good luck.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Be careful about "experts" who have no solid business background. Instead, seek advice on enhancing your business prospects from bona fide sources with good success records.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Standing up to support a colleague's viewpoint — even if it's unpopular — can be difficult if you feel outnumbered. But you'll win plaudits for your honesty and courage.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) While progress continues on resolving that recurring problem, you might feel it's taking too long. But these things always need to develop at their own pace. Be patient.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Someone close to you might have a financial problem and seek your advice. If you do decide to get involved, insist on seeing everything that might be relevant to this situation.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A personal matter takes an interesting turn. The question is, do you want to follow the new path or take time out to reconsider the change? Think this through before deciding.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Moving into a new career is a big step. Check that offer carefully with someone who has been there, done that, and has the facts you'll need to help you make your decision.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your warmth and generosity both of spirit and substance endears you to everyone.

Senate Election Tuesday

city $85,000 — the same price tag as the Dec. 8 special primary. Shea said the state is mandated to pay for the special election in every municipality but "so far we haven't seen a dime."

Last month, the city appropriated $150,000 at the request of Mayor Thomas Koch and the approval of the City Council to pay for the special election here in Quincy. The money came out of the city's free cash account.

"They (the state) is paying for the printing of the ballots which is $12,000 here in Quincy," Shea said. "That's standard for a state election. But a special election is supposed to be paid for by the state — all of it."

Next Tuesday's election will likely mark the first time Quincy voters have headed to the polls in the month of January, Shea said. He noted in the 1930s and 1940s, some city elections were held in December.

The Massachusetts Presidential Primaries were traditionally held in the spring until they were moved up in 2008 to February to be part of so-called "Super Tuesday" which features primaries in numerous states.

One factor that could play a significant role in voter turnout is weather. A snowstorm or extreme cold could keep some people from heading to the polls, observers say.

With just one race on the ballot next Tuesday, Shea said he expects the Quincy vote will be tallied by 9 p.m.

Squantum's Emily Walsh Graduates From Boot Camp

In the coming months, 30,000 young Americans will join the approximately 70,000 to 100,000 Americans already serving in Afghanistan.

Each one has a unique story that begins with boot camp training as Squantum's Emily Lydon Walsh learned.

Boot camp is not for the faint of heart but it's a bit easier when Mom's on the home front rooting for your success, according to Emily who recently graduated from the ten-week course at Fort Jackson, SC.

Private Walsh described 13-mile marches with 45-pound backpacks as par for the course as was training to shoot an M-16 rifle, push-ups, pull-ups and wake-up calls before dawn and survival training.

"They put you out in the woods," Private Walsh said of survival training that involved a lot of running as well as classes on avoiding "IEV's," bombs hidden on the side of the road.

Private Walsh admitted the training was tough and that as many as ten recruits out of her class 70 or 80 didn't make the grade.

"There wasn't a lot of personal time," Private Walsh, said, explaining the numerous letters she wrote home to her mother Susan Walsh in Squantum.

"They helped," recalled Private Walsh who said she loved getting her mother's replies. "You have no contact outside. The letters. They help."

Private Walsh hopes to make the Army her career as she relishes the challenge and is eager for the travel.

In the immediate future, she'll be training for petroleum supply, then training in handling humvees trucks and she has volunteered for Airborne School at Ft. Benning, GA.

Within the year, she expects to be sent to Afghanistan. "They try to prepare you."

Private Walsh's mother, Susan, is so proud of her daughter but it hasn't been easy.

"I've got the bag of letters," Susan Walsh said of the missives from boot camp.

Susan Walsh said she spent the better half of a year trying to talk her daughter, the 5'4" Emily out of enlistment, and encouraging her to join her twin Kathleen Elizabeth at Eastern Nazarene College.

"She spoke about the Army for a year," said Susan. "Now she's a sharp-shooter."

"I want to travel," said Private Walsh, adding she wants to see the world beyond Quincy.

Susan Walsh said she still thinks of Emily and her twin as her little girls, just as they were such a short time ago.

Now that Private Walsh has made her choice, has graduated, "I'm so very proud of her. I'm going to dry up the tears."

A 2001 graduate of North Quincy High School, private Walsh attended Sacred Heart School and Fontbonne Academy.

Private Walsh's father was injured in the Vietnam War and is a Disabled Veteran. The twins' brother is 26-year old John Joseph Walsh.

John Hancock Plunge Saturday

Hancock's birthday, a former resident of Quincy and the first signer of the Declaration of Independence. (Hancock, a prominent Patriot of the American Revolution and the first governor of Massachusetts, was born Jan. 12, 1736 according to the Old Style calendar then in use. According to today's calendar, the date would be Jan. 23, 1737.)

Organizer Leo Kelly believes naming the plunge after Hancock is apropos.

"John Hancock really doesn't get the recognition he deserves," said Kelly. "He was born here in Quincy and a lot of people don't know it." He was the first to sign the Declaration of Independence and he was the first president of the Continental Congress.

"He was a great patriot." Like Doane, Kelly foresees a crowd of over 100 swimmers showing up to get wet. "It's a coffee and hot chocolate day," Kelly said with a laugh. "(Temperature) somewhere in the 30s would be nice."

The event has grown momentum over the years and was moved from Avalon Beach in Quincy Point to Wollaston Beach last year to accommodate the bigger turnout. Participation categories include: Full Plunger, Waist Wader, Knee High, Dunking Toe-Nut, and Geez — I would if I could.

Takes 20 Of 30 Precincts, Turnout 52 Percent

Brown Wins City, Special Senate Race

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Brown has made this "blue" state a lot redder.

State Sen. Scott Brown, riding a wave of support from the state's unenrolled voters in a race perceived as a referendum on President Barack Obama's attempt to overhaul national health care, defeated state Attorney General Martha Coakley in Tuesday's special state election for U.S. Senate.

Brown will be the only Republican state-wide office holder in Massachusetts, a longstanding "blue" state because of its predominant support for Democratic candidates, especially in Presidential elections. A "red" state describes states largely Republican or conservative.

The Wrentham state senator will fill out the balance of the late Ted Kennedy's senate term that ends Jan. 3, 2013. Kennedy died Aug. 25 after serving nearly 47 years in the Senate.

In Quincy, Brown defeated Coakley 53.29 percent to 45.51 percent – a margin about the same state-wide. Brown polled 15,607 votes to Coakley's 13,330. Liberal

But Express Perils Of Complacency At City's Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast

Speakers Applaud Progress On Human Rights Issues

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Speakers at the city's 14th Annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast warned Monday that human rights problems did not vanish with the election of President Barack Obama, the success of Oprah Winfrey or the seven-figure salaries of black sports figures.

In fact, such issues have become ever more complex than in the past as they are now fueled by rampant economic struggles and inequities, complacency, language barriers, immigration issues, and infighting among civil rights proponents, according to Monday's speakers.

"We have many miles to go," said Rev. Michelle Walsh, United First Parish Church (Unitarian), who offered the interfaith blessing, cited the violence, hunger and suffering facing some children in our urban communities and sought prayers for the victims of the earthquake in Haiti.

"The truth is that progress is not measured by those who have achieved, but rather by those who continue to be limited due to discriminatory, unequal and unjust practices," said the keynote speaker Malcolm S. Medley.

An attorney and former legal council for OneUnited Bank, Medley is Chairman of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD).

Selected For Award Posthumously For Establishing Quincy's Community Newspaper

Henry Bosworth Quincy Sun Citizen Of The Year

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Quincy Sun founder Henry Bosworth, who dedicated much of his life to the city he loved and supported innumerable community, charitable and civic causes both personally and through the pages of this newspaper for more than 40 years, has been selected The Sun's Citizen of the Year posthumously for 2009.

Mr. Bosworth, who died suddenly last February, was selected for the honor by a judging panel from a field of 25 nominees submitted by Quincy Sun readers.

The beloved longtime community leader is the 26th recipient of the award. Mr. Bosworth and the late Sen. Paul Harold established the award in 1985 to recognize an individual for outstanding community service. Mr. Harold – who served the city as a city councillor and state senator for many years – also received the award posthumously some years ago.

Mr. Bosworth's life and legacy will be celebrated at a reception held at the Sons of Italy Social Center in March.

Serving on the panel that selected Mr. Bosworth were: Rev. Ann Suzedell, pastor, Quincy Point Congregational Church; Bette Campbell, director of Quincy Access Television; Maralin Manning of Quincy 2000 Collaborative; former Mayor and Quincy Sun Citizen of the Award recipient Frank McCauley; and Quincy attorney George Burke, the award's immediate past recipient. Sun Publisher Robert Bosworth moderated the discussion.

Edith Matthes of Weymouth, a longtime Quincy Sun reader, nominated Mr. Bosworth for the award.

"Henry Bosworth deserves this award because it is only befitting to praise his superior talent in the building of The Quincy stronger than that of past generations, not because they faced less inequality, pain and injustice, but because the civil rights challenges that Dr. King faced, and that he described in his 'I Have a Dream' speech, are even more complex today," said Medley.

"What role will you play in meeting these challenges?" Medley asked his listeners after stressing that each individual can spark change.

"The social injustices still exist," said City Council President Kevin Coughlin as he welcomed the approximately 150 persons to North Quincy High School and the event sponsored by the Human Rights Commission (HRC).

Coughlin cited the "sometimes subtle, sometimes not, judgments that are made based on a person's ethnicity, religion or orientation as opposed to the content of their character..."

Minorities, particularly, endure discrimination in financial transactions, according to Ann Yeomans, Chairperson of the HRC.

Yeomans and Marco Sandonato, Vice Chairman of the HRC, were moderators of the event.

Yeomans announced that the commission will focus on economic rights and grievances this year.

"It's a beginning. It's a very big issue," Yeomans said later when she described the exploitation of minorities through "refund anticipation loans," and frauds involving "payday loans."

Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating recalled that King, himself, addressed the linkage between social and economic issues and human rights.

Keating warned that those same issues still swirl about in a cauldron today, "They're still with us." "He received a great deal of criticism when he got involved in other issues," said Keating, noting that King spoke on the Vietnam War, education, jobs and poverty, because human rights are linked to such issues. "He understood the linkages," and that "all these issues were intertwined," said Keating. Coughlin asked how many people remembered that King was killed in Memphis or that he was in Memphis to support garbage collectors who were on strike.

"There is no question that the need for vigilance continues; that the despair of many need to be addressed; and that the hopes and dreams for equality and justice rest on the individual efforts of each person," said Medley. As examples, Medley cited "high unemployment among young minorities, astonishing racial disparities in the criminal justice and health care systems, re-segregation of neighborhoods and schools, housing discrimination, discrimination in employment, racial profiling and racially motivated hate crimes. "We know they still exist because I oversee over 4,000 such investigations each year," Medley said. "We know, also, that civil rights in America is no longer a black and white issue. African-Americans are no longer America's largest minority. Latinos are..." said Medley who repeatedly urged that each individual commit to change.

Medley, also, said that "differences in the political, religious and philosophical landscape within formerly unified groups have led to challenges," and "infighting" exists over such issues as gay rights, a woman's right to choose and CORI abuses.

Medley urged listeners to act on their own, to be aware and help those in their neighborhoods, at their jobs,

Speaker Recalls Running From Hate On Boston Streets

No words gripped the audience so totally Monday as those of Malcolm S. Medley when he described the times he ran for his life because he was a black teenager from Jamaica and lived in Boston.

Medley and his family emigrated from Jamaica to the United States in the late 1970's when the school integration battle was at a fever pitch throughout the Boston.

"I, as an immigrant, faced daily chases through the streets of Hyde Park," Medley said, recalling his teenage years when his teachers tried to discourage him from such lofty aspirations as law school.

"I and my brother were chased one day by a group of white kids, no older than we were—kids who were too young to even understand why they wanted to do us harm, but who only knew that, for some reason, my family should not have bought a house in that neighborhood..."

furious on Medley and his brother's heels, "As they were gaining on us, an MBTA bus stopped and its door swung open.

"There was no bus stop and the bus did not even pull to the curb. The driver, a middle aged white guy... He didn't even look like me... saw the chase and decided to help."

"He chose to break the rule to help two kids in trouble," said Medley who added that the bus driver's action changed Medley's life and "a heart that was on the verge of hate."

"In that single moment, that driver undid more damage than those kids could have done in a lifetime."

Medley used his story to illustrate the importance of reaching out and offering empathy to those suffering from injustice, "Stand and let others know that hatred and bigotry is unacceptable in the decisions we make."

Governor Deval Patrick appointed Medley chairman of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination. He was legal counsel to One United Bank and served as Arbitrator on the American Arbitration Association's National Roster of Employment and Commercial Arbitrators.

A graduate of Northeastern University, Medley earned his law and Masters of Law degree from Boston University Law School.

WISDOM OF PEARLS

Once you have added a strand (or strands) of pearls to your jewelry wardrobe, you will want to take the necessary precautions to ensure their continued well-being. The most important of these involves storing them away in your jewelry box in their own compartment. This will prevent accidental contact with other pieces of jewelry, which may cause scratches. In fact, it is preferable that a strand of pearls be stored lengthwise, so that they will not even rub against one another. If you look closely at your pearls, you will see that they are strung with knots tied between them to keep them from chafing against each other and damaging their nacre while they are being worn.

We also recommend that you do not subject your pearls to household chemicals, hair sprays, and perfumes. Although a pearl is the product of an oyster or a mussel's defense system, the sheen of the nacre of pearl jewelry needs its own protection to keep its luster and beauty. We can help you choose the right pearls for you. We're proud of the way our designers turn pearl and other beautiful treasures of nature into wearable art, and we invite you to see our selection at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center, PH: 617-773-3636.

A Fitting Tribute To A 'Great Mayor'

The Walter J. Hannon Jr. Parkway 'Excellent Idea'

By TOM HENSHAW

The man who was once described as one of the six all-time best mayors of Quincy is about to receive his due.

Mayor Thomas Koch has recommended that the cross-town Quincy Center Concourse be named the "Walter J. Hannon Jr. Parkway."

Hannon, mayor from 1972 to 1975, was credited by Koch with envisioning the first master plan for downtown Quincy that eventually became a proposed $1 billion plan to rehabilitate the dowdy Center.

"An excellent idea," said Frank McCauley, the former mayor and political historian who grew up around the corner from Hannon in Houghs Neck until the Hannon family moved to Wollaston.

"Walter did good work as mayor. He was business oriented. He was a strong advocate of downtown business."

"It was a terrific idea," said Joseph Shea, the city clerk who served as Hannon's executive secretary when he was mayor. "He was a great guy, a great mayor."

Hannon, now 78, still lives on Forbes Hill Road in Wollaston.

"He was a very decisive man," continued Shea.

"He was very quick. There was no hanging on waiting for Walter. If you asked for something, you got an answer right away."

"He originated the Hilginhurst Report, the first study of downtown Quincy."

It was McCauley, in his book, "Quincy, Massachusetts, A Political History, 1889-2000," who listed Hannon as one of the city's half dozen greatest mayors.

"As a city councilor and mayor," McCauley wrote, "Hannon had the foresight to realize that if Quincy was to continue as an affordable city in which to live, work and raise a family, the city needed a strong business, commercial and industrial base.

"Hannon was never one to shy away from espousing a cause in which he believed, no matter how unpopular that cause.

"He led the fight to allow construction of the State Street South complex in the Montclair section of Quincy. (State Street South in 2000 was the largest taxpayer and the largest employer in the city.)

"As mayor, he supported the construction of the South Quincy MBTA station as well as the combined pickup of rubbish and garbage. His support of these two issues was largely responsible for his defeat for reelection to a third term in 1975."

McCauley and Hannon were sworn into the City Council from Wards 1 and 5 respectively on the same day in 1963 and both were Republicans, although Hannon morphed into a Democrat as he grew older.

"He picked up a Democratic ballot so he could vote for his friend Arthur Tobin in the 1978 primary," said Shea.

Incidentally, the other five on McCauley's list of the greatest mayors are Charles Bryant (1902-04), Thomas Burgin (1935-42 & 1950-51), Amelio Della Chiesa (1957-65), Thomas McGrath (1927-32), and James McIntyre (1966-71).

Gutro Seeks Neighborhood Review Of School Site Plans

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro wants city officials to hold neighborhood meetings on current proposals for the new Central Middle School site and on the planned disposal of the existing building and property on Hancock Street.

"I want to ensure that neighbors know the facts and have a substantial voice early in the process and before final decisions are made," Gutro said, explaining his plan for the meetings.

Gutro will submit a City Council resolution asking the Koch administration, school committee and school department to participate in two neighborhood meetings.

Koch has proposed that the former Winfield House and adjoining properties across from Merrymount Park serve as the location for the new Central Middle School and that the current site be sold and restored to the tax rolls.

According to Gutro's timetable, the first meeting would be held in late February.

That meeting would focus on the administration's plan for the potential sale of the school property at 1012 Hancock St. and invite residents to weigh in on acceptable development for that area.

Gutro believes the second meeting should be planned in the spring after the City of Quincy selects an architect for the new school. The second meeting would concentrate on ensuring that the site design be compatible with the neighborhood and surrounding area.

Gutro will introduce his resolution Monday at the City Council meeting

• On Jan. 30, 1835, Andrew Jackson becomes the first American president to experience an assassination attempt. Richard Lawrence, an unemployed house painter, shot at Jackson, but his gun misfired. A furious 67-year-old Jackson confronted his attacker, clubbing Lawrence several times with his walking cane. A second shot also misfired.

• On Jan. 27, 1888, the National Geographic Society is founded in Washington, D.C., for "the increase and diffusion of geographical knowledge." Readership of the magazine did not grow, however, until it changed the format to articles of general interest accompanied by photographs.

• On Jan. 25, 1924, the first Winter Olympics takes off in style at Chamonix in the French Alps. Spectators were thrilled by the ski jump and bobsled, as well as 12 other events involving a total of six sports. The United States came in third, winning its only gold medal in the 500-meter speedskating event.

• On Jan. 26, 1934, producer Samuel Goldwyn buys the film rights to "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz" by L.

Frank Baum. Goldwyn had intended for Shirley Temple to play Dorothy in the film, but 17-year-old Judy Garland got the part instead.

• On Jan. 31, 1945, Pvt. Eddie Slovik becomes the first American soldier since the Civil War to be executed for desertion – and the only one who suffered such a fate during World War II. Slovik claimed he was "too scared and too nervous" to be a rifleman, and threatened to run away if forced into combat. He deserted the next day.

• On Jan. 29, 1964, Stanley Kubrick's black comic masterpiece, "Dr. Strangelove or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb," opens in theaters. The movie's popularity was evidence of changing attitudes toward atomic weapons and the concept of nuclear deterrence.

• On Jan. 28, 1978, "Fantasy Island" is created as a follow-up to "The Love Boat" TV series. "Fantasy Island" became a hit and ran for six years. Screen actor Ricardo Montalban played the mysterious host Mr. Roarke, and his diminutive sidekick, Tattoo, was played by dwarf Herve Villechaize.

Son Beams

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Honoring Henry

Mixed emotions.

But the right thing to do.

That's how I sum up the selection of my father – and Quincy Sun founder – Henry Bosworth as the 2009 Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year. Last week, five judges representing a cross-section of the community deliberated and discussed and decided that Henry should receive the award he helped establish.

He will be honored posthumously at a reception in March at the Quincy Sons of Italy.

Henry's certainly a worthy recipient. No question about that.

But I think I knew my father pretty well and he probably would have insisted that some other local volunteer or community leader or "unsung hero" receive the award instead. He had been nominated in the past and while grateful for the nomination, he quickly removed his name from consideration.

That truly was the epitome of Henry W. Bosworth, Jr. "Thanks for thinking of me . . . but certainly there's someone more deserving."

That was the reasoning behind establishing the award in the first place in 1985. The original concept was suggested by then Sen. Paul Harold, a good friend of Henry's and a loyal supporter of this newspaper. Henry embraced the idea of recognizing an individual for "outstanding community service."

But there was one condition.

The award would be a "community award." It would not be akin to Time Magazine editors getting together and picking a "Person of the Year."

Henry wanted the community involved in the award process and in its selection.

And so it was.

Since the award's inception, Sun readers have had the opportunity to nominate a person or persons he or she believes are worthy of the honor. After nominations are opened in the fall, a ballot is published in The Quincy Sun to assist readers in making their suggestions for the award.

Once the nomination deadline closes at the end of December, Henry selected a panel of judges who would meet to discuss all the nominees. And regardless of the number of nominations a person received, each was given equal consideration. It wasn't a popularity contest, Henry insisted.

This year, one of our longtime readers submitted the nomination in Henry's name. Edith Matthes of Weymouth did not know Henry personally. But over the years she got to know him by reading his "Sunbeams" column and other pages of The Quincy Sun. Her youngest boy was a Sun newscarrier many editions ago.

HENRY

Trust me when I tell you Henry would have cherished Edith's ballot. He kept correspondence from so many readers over the years. And from time to time Henry would find that stash of letters and re-read them. Or he'd show me a letter and let me read it for myself.

"See what this paper means to the community," Henry would tell me. "That's why I started this paper. The Sun is important to the community and we're proud to be Quincy's community newspaper."

And that's why The Sun award includes the community. You can't have one without the other.

Some readers may find it intriguing to learn that Henry seldom cast a vote in the award selection process. Henry always said in the event of a tie, he would cast the deciding vote. But I don't think we ever had a tie. In more recent years, Henry was fond of casting a "ceremonial" vote to give the selection The Sun's "seal of approval."

But he knew deep down the recipient didn't need The Sun's approval. A recipient recognized by the community and selected by community leaders was a worthy recipient. Henry was always fond of saying the Sun is merely the "vehicle" for recognizing the award winner.

Henry also could "break from tradition" if the circumstances were warranted. A few years ago, the discussion came down to two very worthy individuals – both known throughout the city for outstanding community service – one focusing on the environment, the other in education and charitable endeavors.

One of the nominees was a longtime friend of Henry's who was terminally ill. As the judges discussed the two leading candidates more and more, Henry stepped in and said "Let's have co-recipients this year."

For the first time, two people were recognized that year. And one – sadly – is no longer with us.

That's the kind of person Henry was. Always trying to find a way to give credit where credit is due. Making sure the community finally sings the praises of that "unsung hero."

The Quincy Sun – and the community at large – never had a chance to honor Henry for all the good he did before he suddenly passed away nearly a year ago.

So this year, we're making another exception.

Henry Bosworth will receive The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year Award posthumously in March.

And his life and legacy – this newspaper – will be celebrated.

The judges got it right selecting Henry.
Honoring him will be an honor.

Laskey, a longtime member of the William R. Caddy Detachment #124, is the current National Commandant of the Marine Corps League.

Laskey enlisted in the Marines in June, 1960. He participated aboard the USS Lake Champlain in the recovery of Commander Alan Sheppard upon completion of his first flight into outer space and his splash down in the Atlantic Ocean. He later participated in the Cuban blockade aboard the USS Essex in October 1962.

After reenlisting in 1962, Laskey served as a Platoon Sergeant, Security Platoon Headquarters Company, Seventh Marines at Chu Lai, South Vietnam. He was later transferred to the First Marine Division's Casualty Recovery Center as an operational deployment casualty field reporter.

He returned to the U.S. in 1967, and served on recruiting duty in Quincy.

The men in the photo with Laskey and Mayor McIntyre are unidentified. The Caddy Detachment is interested in their identity. If you can identify any of them please notify Detachment Adjutant Marc Connolly, Caddy Detachment, 111 Newbury St., North Quincy, MA. Phone number: 617-479-3505.

 YOURS VERY TRULY,
 S. H. COUCH CO. INC.

THIS IS A 1917 postcard used by the S.H. Couch Company in Norfolk Downs to acknowledge receipt of orders. The company, located at 4 Fayette St., manufactured all types of private telephone, annunciator and intercom systems for use within offices, factories, hospitals, apartment buildings or anywhere the use of Telephone Company phones was not practical. They also made fire alarm system. Samuel Couch and his brother William started the company in Boston in 1894, 18 years after Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone. The company was located on Purchase Street in Boston next to the Boston Gear Works. In 1910 Couch built this building in Norfolk Downs and moved the company here just a few years after the Boston Gear Works had also moved to a new plant nearby. Many other companies moved to this part of Quincy. By 1950, there were over 40 industrial manufacturing companies in Wollaston and North Quincy. Some of the larger ones like Boston Gear, Tubular Rivet and Pneumatic Scale employed thousands of workers. Couch employed over 250. Today, there are only a handful of much small manufacturers left. Couch's building show here was expanded over the years but the company was eventually sold and then closed in 1985. The building became home to Work, Inc., and now the property is for sale again and will likely become the site of residential condominiums or apartments. Heart-felt Thanks From Former Councillor Leo Kelly

 Dear Ward One residents,

It has been my distinct honor and privilege to serve as your Ward Councillor from 1974 to 1985, from 2004 to the present and as Council President 1980-1981.

It has been a profound pleasure to represent you on the City Council, and it is with deep sadness that I step down from public service. I am most appreciative of the confidence you have shown in me and the courtesy and respect with which you have always treated me.

I can proudly say that working together we have made remarkable Open Space improvements in Ward One. Our special corner of the world has changed dramatically while I have been in Office. We fought for Open Space: Broad Meadows, Cobblestone property, Germantown and Houghs Neck marshes, General Palmer Park, the Crusher, Brill Field and Bayswater Boatyard. Countless other smaller parcels of land have contributed to the acquisition of more Open Space in Ward One than in any other ward.

We fought the filling-in of Quincy Bay, fought the big fight of cleaning up Boston Harbor. We fought for Federal dollars during storms and blizzard clean-ups-remember "781" We fought to keep our schools and their funding, and we fought against development of small parcels of land.

During my tenure, millions of H.U.D. dollars were appropriated for Ward One, which greatly benefited residents. With home and public works improvements, we changed the face of Ward One forever. With your help, we have greatly improved our community's quality of life.

We established Manet

Community Health Center and Houghs Neck Community Center. Successfully, we added Manet into Germantown and other parts of the City. Houghs Neck and Germantown Community Centers, which were established in my first term of Office, have greatly expanded their programs and activities. I have recently had the pleasure of seeing Germantown Neighborhood Center expand into a new building. There was an addition to the Merrymount School and, as I leave office, a new Quincy High School is under construction.

I have been particularly pleased to Chair the Downtown Committee of the City Council and have an exciting vision of our new downtown. I have also been able to accomplish the installation of underground utilities on McGrath Highway.

You have all played an important part in the journey we have traveled together in Ward One from 1974 into the new century. Our streets are safer, our air is cleaner and we can actually swim again in our beaches. Heart-felt thanks for all of the support you have given me over the years. Best wishes for good health and much happiness this year and the years ahead!

Warmest regards,
 Leo J. Kelly, Former
 Ward One Councillor

Mayor Joins In Plea To Permit Local W.P.A. Hiring

By FRANK McCAULEY

Mayor Thomas S. Burgin, along with a group of mayors from other cities in the state, appealed to Governor Charles F. Hurley and state W.P.A. administrator John J. McDonough, urging that cities and towns be permitted to hire W.P.A. workers in their own localities instead of hiring workers assigned to jobs by the state office.

Gov. Hurley promised to take up the matter in Washington where he has gone for the inauguration of President Roosevelt for a third term, but McDonough declared that he has no authority in the matter and he referred the mayors to higher authorities in Washington.

TRAILERS LIKE THIS one have been set up at five Quincy elementary schools who are competing in a textile drive to raise money for their PTOs and to increase awareness about waste and recycling. Participating schools are: Beechwood Knoll School, 225 Fenno St.; Bernazzani School, 701 Furnace Brook Pkwy.; Merrymount School, 4 Agawam Rd.; Montclair School, 8 Belmont St.; and Merrymount School, 50 Huckins Ave.

Five To Raise PTO Funds, Recycling Awareness Schools Launch Textile Fundraiser

Five local elementary schools have entered into a competition to raise funds for their PTOs and to increase awareness about waste and recycling.

The Beechwood, Bernazzani, Merrymount, Montclair and Squantum elementary schools are participating in the challenge and the 20-foot trailers have been delivered to accept clothes, shoes, household linen and small toys in each of their parking lots.

Bay State Textile Corp., a sponsor of the event, has donated the trailers and $1,000 in potential prize money to benefit each school's PTOs. Each school earns $30 per ton and the winner will be awarded an additional $500.

As an added incentive, Paul Curry of Bay State Textile will donate an extra $500 to the first school to collect 10 tons, $300 to the second school and $200 to the third school to collect 10 tons.

The clothing, shoes and small toys will be exported to third world countries. This product is very important to these economies as importers from around the world employ thousands of local people to grade the product and sell it in local markets. Tens of thousands of small retailers then buy this product and sell it in small stands or stores to support their families.

In Quincy, diverting just 50 tons of textiles from the trash saves and earns taxpayers several thousand dollars that can be used for police, fire, teachers, parks and playgrounds, city officials said.

"Recycling textiles is very important to protecting our planet as well," said DPW Program Manager

John Sullivan.

"As used clothing is reclaimed or reused, natural resources and energy to produce new clothing is conserved. The average American discards 68 pounds of clothing and other textiles every year. That's 6 million pounds in Quincy alone," Sullivan added.

To support the public schools in the textile drive, bring unwanted clothing, shoes, linens and small toys to Beechwood Knoll School, 225 Fenno St.; Bernazzani School, 701 Furnace Brook Pkwy.; Merrymount School, 4 Agawam Rd.; Montclair School, 8 Belmont St.; and Merrymount School, 50 Huckins Ave.

Trailers are open 24-hours a day, seven days a week and will be available through June.

For more information, call John Sullivan at the DPW, 617-376-1953.

Sacred Heart Parish To Host Children's Choir Festival March 20

Sacred Heart Parish in North Quincy, will host the third annual Children's Choir Festival of the South-eastern New England Chapter of Choristers Guild Saturday, March 20 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

More than 200 children are expected to participate. The call goes out for Quincy and neighboring community's church choir and directors to submit registration forms by Jan. 30.

The festival will begin with a complimentary and optional dinner for the children's choir directors Friday, March 19 at 6 p.m. followed by a special director's workshop from 7 to 9 p.m.

led by Andrea Baxter, guest clinician.

Baxter serves as Associate Director for Music at Trinity Lutheran Church in Lansdale, Pa., where she directs two children's choirs and the youth choir, oversees the handbell program, and teaches preschool music. In 2007, she was selected by Choristers Guild as one of the five exceptional children's choir leaders in the nation.

The March 20th event will feature a day of music, fun, food and singing for the participating children. The day will conclude with a festival worship service in Sacred Heart Church at 6 p.m.

Church choirs need not be members of the Choristers Guild to join. The fee for the director's workshop is $20 per person. The fee for each participating child is $10, and includes the daylong workshop, meals, snacks, tee shirt, etc. Each participating choir must purchase music, and no photocopied music will be permitted.

Call Howard Lotis at Sacred Heart rectory at 617-328-8666 to discuss any financial concerns.

Registration forms, audio sample files, and up-to-date festival details are available at the parish website www.sacredheartquincy.org/cg.

Kelly Park Re-Landscaping Topic For Houghs Neck Garden Club Feb. 3

The re-landscaping of Leo Kelly Park will be the program for the Houghs Neck Garden Club Feb. 3.

A slide show will feature the long, complicated, but richly rewarded process of obtaining a $10,000 Community Preservation Fund grant, and finding the best plants for the park.

Also trying to find rocks to construct an earthen berm, and coordinating the efforts of people with many different areas of expertise, helped by the Houghs Neck community.

The fire station crew has offered temporary storage for the plants, and also has allowed the garden club to use their water.

The Sean Farrell Construction Company and the Department of Public Works donated and delivered rocks, and boy scouts dug the holes for the project.

The program will be held at 7 p.m. in the second floor community room at Nut Island. Visitors are welcome, and refreshments will be served.

For more information, call 617-481-2111.

Solo Harpsichord Recital Sunday At Library

A solo harpsichord recital by Paul Cienniwa will be held Sunday, Jan. 24 at 3 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St. as this year's Concert at the Crane series kick off. It is sponsored by the Friends of The Library.

The program will include works from the Baroque period by Johann Sebastian Bach, Francois Couperin, and Domenico Scarlatti.

Cienniwa has performed at St. Thomas Church Fifth Avenue, the Kingston Chamber Music Festival and in Chicago with violinist Rachel Barton Pine.

He received the Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Yale University, where he was a student of Richard Rephann.

He is the director of Sine Nomine choral ensemble and Music Director at First Church in Boston.

Morrissey Reminds Seniors About Circuit Breaker Tax Credit

State Sen. Michael W. Morrissey (D-Quincy) reminds senior citizens that there are a number of income tax deductions that are available to them, including the popular "Circuit Breaker."

The Circuit Breaker is an income tax credit for seniors who own or rent the property they live in. This credit is typically available if you, or your spouse, are 65 or older by the end of the tax year.

The maximum credit allowed is $960 for the tax year beginning Jan. 1, 2009.

To be eligible for the credit for the 2009 tax year, a taxpayer must be 65 years of age or older before Jan. 1, 2010 (for joint filers, it is sufficient if one taxpayer is 65 years of age or older), and must own or rent residential property in Massachusetts and occupy the property as his or her principal residence.

The taxpayer's total income cannot exceed $51,000 for a single filer who is not the head of a household, $64,000 for a head of household, or $77,000 for taxpayers filing jointly.

No credit is allowed for a married taxpayer unless a joint return is filed. This is designed to ensure that the same property is not used by two different filers. In addition, the assessed valuation of the real estate cannot exceed $788,000.

Taxpayers who are eligible for the tax credit in the 2009 tax year can claim the credit by submitting a completed Schedule CB, Circuit Breaker Credit, with their 2009 state income tax return. An eligible taxpayer who does not normally file a state income tax return may obtain a refund by filing a return with Schedule CB.

"As with all claimed tax credits and deductions, seniors should keep the records, receipts and other documentation supporting their claim for the credit," Morrissey said.

The Department of Revenue has created a special Seniors Page on their website to help educate Massachusetts seniors about the Circuit Breaker and other possible tax deductions. Click on the "Information for Senior Citizens and Retirees" link under Quick Links on the Department's homepage at <http://www.mass.gov/dor>.

For more information contact the Massachusetts Department of Revenue's Customer Service Bureau at (617) 887-MDOR or toll-free in Massachusetts at 800-392-6089.

Hospital Rates To Increase Feb. 1

By FRANK MCCAULEY

A general increase in rates at the Quincy City Hospital, effective Feb. 1 was announced by Dr. Joseph J. Leone, director, following a conference of hospital and city officials. The increase will not affect patients admitted before the first of next month.

In general, the rates of ward patients and private and semi-private room patients with "facilities" are increased while the rates of patients in private and semi-private rooms without such facilities remain the same. The facilities, it was explained, consist of a toilet.

The new rates for private rooms with facilities are $23 and $26 daily for Quincy residents and non-residents, respectively, as against old rates of $22 and $25.

The new rates for private rooms without facilities are $22 and $25, unchanged.

Dr. Leone said, "These new rates are reasonable and compare favorably with existing rates of other area hospitals."

Democratic Party Caucus, Delegate Training Jan. 27

In anticipation of the upcoming Democratic caucuses being held throughout the state in February, Democratic State Committee members Alicia Gardner and Patrick McDermott are co-sponsoring two one-hour trainings on how to run a caucus and how to run to be a delegate.

The training sessions will be Wednesday, Jan. 27 at Braintree Town Hall, 1 John Kennedy Memorial Dr., from 7 to 9 p.m.

At 7 p.m., Nancy Stenberg will facilitate the caucus training that is open to town/city and ward chairs as well as interested Democrats. Ward and two chairs are asked to bring their caucus materials with them to the training.

At 8 p.m., Russ Ashton and Mel Poindexter of the Affirmative Action Outreach Committee will provide training on how to run to be a delegate to the June convention.

Delegates will be elected in February to represent their cities and towns at this year's Democratic State Convention being held in Worcester at the DCU Center, June 4 and 5. Delegates will nominate candidates for governor, lieutenant governor, treasurer, auditor, secretary of state, and attorney general.

For more information or to confirm attendance at the training sessions, e-mail Alicia Gardner at agardner_6@yahoo.com or call Patrick McDermott, 617-594-0640 by Friday, Jan. 22.

Ward 1 Democrats To Caucus Feb. 11 At Germantown Center

Registered Democrats in Ward 1 will be holding their annual Caucus at the Germantown Neighborhood Center, 333 Palmer St. Thursday, Feb. 11 at 7 p.m. and will elect nine Delegates and three Alternates to the 2010 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. The Caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Ward 1.

All ballots will be written and secret. Those not elected, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on-delegates in the following categories: youth, minority or disabled.

Eight Delegates and two Alternates will be equally divided between men and women, the odd ninth Delegate and third Alternate will be either a man or woman, in accordance with Democratic Party rules. Anyone at least 18 years old and registered as a Massachusetts Democrat in Ward 1 as of Dec. 31, 2009, is welcome to attend the Caucus and run for a Delegate or Alternate position.

The Convention will be held Friday, June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center in Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the Caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the Delegate-selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, MA, 02120 no later than ten days after the caucus date.

For more information, call the Democratic Ward 1 Chairman Michael Berry at 617-479-2787, or the Democratic State Committee at 617-776-2676.

'History Of Butler Pond' Topic At Historical Society Jan. 30

The Friends of Butler Pond, the Quincy Historical Society and the Park Department's Environmental Treasures Program will present a free talk entitled "The History of Butler Pond: A Conversation" Saturday, Jan. 30 at 10 a.m. at the Quincy Historical Society, 8 Adams St., Quincy.

Among those scheduled to participate are:

Rebecca Dinsmore, docent and gardener at the Quincy Homestead; Andrea Marlar, president, Friends of Butler Pond; Anthony Ricci, architect, chairman of Quincy Historical Commission and treasurer of the Quincy Historical Society; and Tom Scott, a researcher on Butler Pond.

Tom Scott will present his research on the history of the Pond during which the public will be encouraged to share their memories of the area.

Following the presentation, those interested may stroll over to view the Pond with Anthony Ricci who will discuss architectural highlights.

For more information, call 617-472-0799.

WEST OF TRACKS WON'T PREVENT A CUT IN DEBT, MAYOR ESTIMATES

Quincy can handle the major phases of the "West of the Tracks" project this year in addition to the normal capital outlay programs and, at the same time reduce its bonded debt by $250,000, Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa estimated.

Mayor Della Chiesa said that the city this year could handle essentially all phases of the big "West of the Tracks" project except the construction of the proposed 1,095 car parking area, and carry on other capital projects and still reduce the city's debt by $224,000. (Editor's note: The "West of the Tracks" project encompassed the taking of land on the west side of the tracks adjacent to Granite Street by eminent domain and building a municipal metered parking area. The project bogged down due to substantial opposition and was never implemented.)

7 P.M. Meeting Tonight At Sacred Heart School Three Parochial Elementary Schools To Merge To Form Quincy Catholic Academy

Three catholic elementary schools in Quincy — Sacred Heart, St. Ann and St. Mary Schools — will merge to form the Quincy Catholic Academy under a plan which calls for the new academy to open at the present Sacred Heart location this September.

A letter dated Jan. 16 was mailed to parents and guardians of students of the three schools earlier this week. The letter is signed by Rev. David P. Callahan, pastor, St. Mary Parish; Rev. John W. O'Brien, pastor, Sacred Heart Church; and Rev. John J. Ronaghan, pastor, St. Ann Parish.

A parent meeting to launch the new initiative will be held tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the site of the new Quincy Catholic Academy (Sacred Heart Auditorium), 370 Hancock St., Quincy.

The letter said the merging is a result of financial constraints created by "declining enrollments, changing demographics and struggling economies."

"Like Catholic pastors and educators across the Archdiocese and our nation, we are working to address the challenges of declining enrollments, changing demographics, struggling economies, resulting in financial constraints. In coordination with the Catholic Schools Office of the Archdiocese, we have developed a plan to build a strong, long-term Catholic educational community for our current and future generations of students," the letter stated.

The pastors said merging the three schools into the Quincy Catholic Academy "will bring together the best of the three current elementary schools to serve children from pre-kindergarten through eighth grade. We are positioning our new Catholic Academy to be successful in fulfilling the mission and ministry of Catholic education. Quincy Catholic Academy will open at the present Sacred Heart location in September, 2010."

The pastors also expressed in their letter their "strong belief that part of what makes our faith community so exceptional is a shared commitment to Catholic education. Along with our parishioners, we support Cardinal Sean P. O'Malley's belief that Catholic schools have educated thousands of students who have gone on to higher education, successful careers, raised families and been active members of the Catholic community. Largely because of your participation and support.

"Quincy is blessed with an incredible spirit and commitment to Catholic education. Our goal is to provide a positive experience and smooth transition for our students, families, teachers, and staff," the pastors added.

Quincy Bicycle Rack Program Completed

This past fall, Quincy took advantage of the Massachusetts Area Planning Council's (MAPC) Bike Rack reimbursement program and purchased 34 bicycle racks.

All 34 bicycle racks have been installed on public properties throughout the city, including community centers, the Ryan Boathouse, the Adams Shore Branch of the Thomas Crane Public Library, and Pagnano Towers (Quincy Housing Authority).

"With more and more people choosing to ride a bicycle than drive a car, we are very pleased to be able to increase the city's bike rack inventory," said Dennis E. Harrington, Planning Director.

"Youth and adults alike can now safely park their bicycles at the city's community centers, at City Hall, and at a branch of the Thomas Crane Public Library," Harrington added.

Quincy's participation in this program came at no cost to Quincy taxpayers. MAPC recently reimbursed the city for costs incurred through the program, upon successful completion of closeout procedures.

"I appreciate the work accomplished by our fine Planning Department in the area of energy conservation," said Mayor Tom Koch.

"I thank Dennis Harrington, Mary Smith, and Kristina Johnson for spearheading the efforts to implement and manage this program," the mayor added.

City To Hold H1N1 Flu Clinic Tonight At Health Department

By JOE REARDON

Quincy's second H1N1 Flu Clinic is slated for tonight (Thursday) from 5 to 8 p.m. at the Quincy Health Department located at the Kennedy Center, 440 East Squantum St., North Quincy.

Health Department Commissioner Drew Scheele said there are 6,000 doses of the vaccine still available.

The first clinic, held last Sunday, proved to be a huge success, as Quincy became the first city or town in the state to operate two emergency dispensing sites simultaneously. Volunteers at the Wollaston School gymnasium dispensed 450 inoculations while 250 more were done at the Clifford Marshall School's gymnasium. The park department building served as the Emergency Operations Center (EOC). There were 45 volunteers in all.

Scheele said the success of the clinic was a result of the efforts Quincy Police Department, fire department, department of health and department of public works.

"It went very smooth," said Scheele. "It was a collaboration between several agencies."

The vaccinations were initially going to be given out last November, but a shortage in the vaccine in Massachusetts delayed the first clinic. There is no shortage this time around, according to Scheele.

"We still have plenty of the vaccine," he said.

Residents should wear clothing that allows quick access to your upper arm for the administration of the influenza vaccine. Kids 10-18 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Slush, ice and, often, hazardous roadways caused dozens of regulars to miss Monday's 14th Annual Martin Luther King Breakfast.

Despite the weather, some 150 persons showed for the early morning event and a fresh hot breakfast at North Quincy High School.

There, the high school students cooks and servers, members of the Robotics Club, were already at their posts with smiles as were the young singers from the Germantown Neighborhood Center and members of North Quincy High School ROTC who led the Pledge of Allegiance.

"We always have snow and we always have a spirited (discussion) here," said Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating, adding that Dr. King's "message is alive and well in the City of Quincy."

City Council President

Kevin Coughlin stood in as Acting Mayor as Mayor Thomas Koch was out of town on business.

"The mayor's out of town on a very important trip for the future of our city," said Coughlin who drew laughs when he assessed his power as acting mayor.

"I promised the mayor I wouldn't take the title too seriously," said Coughlin who recalled other acting mayors who reorganized city government when may-

Quincy teachers Edward Smith and Brian Smith organized the hot breakfast served at Monday's event.

"Stand and let others know that hatred and bigotry is unacceptable in the jokes and comments that we make. See the human face and the hurt behind each offensive joke," said Medley.

"It is your empathy that can send a powerful message that you care about others that may not look, worship or speak like you do..." Coughlin, also, urged each listener to get involved. He described King's life and accomplishments as "an indelible and cherished part of our history but they remain frozen in time if all we do is to remember them, speak of them and sing songs at wonderful events like this one, once a year."

"To have any real meaning his life must live on in each one of us," said Coughlin.

Coughlin and Keating presented awards and commendations for their efforts in advancing human rights to Beth Ann Strollo, executive director of Quincy Community Action Program (QCAP) and Rev. David Wooter, executive director of the Esther R. Sanger Center for Compassion, Quincy Crisis Center.

A special award was presented to Quincy veteran Harvey Solomon, treasurer of the HRC.

Also attending were state legislators, Rep. Stephen Tobin, Quincy and Rep. Joe Driscoll, Braintree, Councilors John Keenan and Doug Gutro, Ward 5; Pam Beatty of St. Chrysostom Church and Barbara Mendez and Ann Keating, Mayor's Commission on Women. Keating was the founding president of DOVE.

Human Rights Commission Members include Lt. Jeffrey Burrell, Thomas Fabrizio, Peter Hilton, Frank Poon, Niel Orlando, Solomon, Sandomato and Yeomans.

Associate Commission members are Steve Hennessy, Ed Grogan, and Kristen Hughes.

BBB Advice On How To Vet Haiti Earthquake Charity Appeals

As immediate relief needs are assessed in the wake of the devastating earthquake in Haiti on Jan. 12th, many Americans are looking for ways to help by donating to a charity.

The BBB warns that - as occurred following the tsunami in 2004 and Katrina in 2005 - fraudulent charities will likely emerge to try and scam donations from well-meaning Americans.

"Whenever there is a major natural disaster, be it home or abroad, there are two things you can count on. The first is the generosity of Americans to donate time and money to help victims, and the second is the appearance of poorly run and in some cases fraudulent charities," said Paula Fleming, BBB spokesperson.

"Not only do Americans need to be concerned about avoiding fraud, they also need to make sure their money goes to competent relief organizations that are equipped and experienced to handle the unique challenges of providing assistance."

BBB offers the following six tips to help Americans decide where to direct donations:

- Rely on expert opinion when it comes to evaluating a charity. Be cautious when relying on third-party recommendations such as bloggers or other Web sites, as they might not have fully researched the listed relief organizations. The public can go to bbb.org/charity to research charities and relief organizations to verify that they are accredited by the BBB and meet the 20 Standards for Charity Accountability.

- Be wary of claims that 100 percent of donations will assist relief victims. Despite what an organization might claim, charities have fund raising and administrative costs. Even a credit card donation will involve, at a minimum, a processing fee. If a charity claims 100 percent of collected funds will be assisting earthquake victims, the truth is that the organization is still probably incurring fund raising and administrative expenses. They may use some of their other funds to pay this, but the expenses will still be incurred.

- Be cautious when giving online. Be cautious about online giving, especially in response to spam messages and emails that claim to link to a relief organization. In response to the tsunami disaster in 2004, there were concerns raised about many Web sites and new organizations that were created overnight allegedly to help victims.

- Find out if the charity has an on-the-ground presence in the impacted areas. Unless the charity already has staff in the effected areas, it may be difficult to get new aid workers to quickly provide assistance. See if the charity's website clearly describes what they can do to address immediate needs.

- Find out if the charity is providing direct aid or raising money for other groups. Some charities may be raising money to pass along to relief organizations. If so, you may want to consider "avoiding the middleman" and giving directly to charities that have a presence in the region. Or, at a minimum, check out the ultimate recipients of these donations to ensure the organizations are equipped to effectively provide aid.

- Gifts of clothing, food or other in-kind donations.

In-kind drives for food and clothing-while well intentioned-may not necessarily be the quickest way to help those in need - unless the organization has the staff and infrastructure to be able to properly distribute such aid. Ask the charity about their transportation and distribution plans. Be wary of those who are not experienced in disaster relief assistance.

Hallowed Herbs Tea House

Can you remember a time when we weren't so busy? Our calendars keep filling up with appointments, obligations and countless things to do. What happened to the stillness of life when we enjoyed the simplicity of just being with each other.

Hallowed Herbs Tea House is that place where people are celebrated and time is cherished. The avenue of course is Tea, Camellia sinensis. It was once said that tea leaves are the product and the embodiment of three elements - Heaven, Earth and Man. Heaven meaning the climate and the weather, Earth meaning soil fertility and Man referring to the process, the work of making tea from the leaves. There is no coincidence that this parallels the mind, body and spirit concept.

Tea is a power packed beverage with many health benefits other than the well known antioxidants that we often hear about. It is however, in the quality of the tea your drinking which is influenced by the three elements described. January happens to be National Hot Tea Month, so why not begin the New Year with a healthful start by incorporating a great, quality cup of tea.

Hallowed Herbs Tea House is an English Victorian, quaint tea room in an 1850's historic home located at 25 High School Avenue in Quincy. The purpose of the Tea House is to bring an experience of quality that is peaceful and refreshing. The food is made lovingly with great care and is presented in the style of an afternoon tea. People are invited to take their time and enjoy themselves.

There is a wall of loose-leaf teas for purchase as well as other tea accoutrements. Since opening the patrons have raved about the homemade scones, so they are now available for purchase at the Tea House. The Fruit Center in Milton is now carrying our scones in several varieties. Education classes and events about tea will be starting in February. Valentine's Day specials will take place throughout the month. Call for reservations or for more information - 617-

Life Safety Concerns This Winter

I have to touch upon this subject this time of the year where ice and snow present their own potential hazards while I ask for a moment of your time to remind you of some precautions, do's and don'ts.

So here's a brief review focusing on ice rescue if you happen to witness someone trapped on ice or submerged within icy water this winter.

So what should you do if you witness someone falling through the ice? Act quickly and call 911 for immediate help. This will alert trained and equipped rescue personnel. AVOID going out on the ice yourself. Often times would be rescuers become victims themselves. Our policy is to reach, throw or row. Extend a branch, pole or ladder to the victim. Throw them a buoyant object such as a life ring or float tied to a rope. We will often use a lightweight boat to row out to the victim or push it towards them along the ice while held by the rescuers in immersion suits.

Each situation dictates its own solution. In the fire service, it is essential not to become part of the problem yourself. Each rescue is unique, well thought out and performed carefully so as not to complicate what is already difficult.

If you witness a cold-water emergency, think and respond properly while not reacting irrationally. Contact those prepared to respond to such an incident and assist as safely as you can if you can do so safely. Think REACH, THROW or ROW, while not becoming a component of the problem or a victim yourself.

I also want to take this opportunity to remind you of another winter concern. Exit discharge, that portion of an exit outside a building, MUST be free of snow. This is particularly important as it pertains to assembly occupancies such as restaurants, nightclubs and bars, while equally important for mercantile properties as well. Free and unobstructed exit access from the inside is not enough; it is imperative that the exit doors open freely toward the outside so that patrons can exit freely and quickly if need be. Snow and ice can impede this process and MUST be removed if present. Proper maintenance of life safety considerations depends on it. Effective and immediate evacuation depends on it as well.

And lastly, consider the importance of having two means of unobstructed egress from your own homes too. In an emergency, it is not enough to have access to one exit only; your evacuation plans should consider alternate ways of exiting your home if needed.

So consider snow and ice removal from all potential exits so that doors can open freely and paths away from your home are passable and unobstructed. Thank you for doing so.

Mayor Meets With StreetWorks On Status Of Downtown Project

Mayor Thomas Koch and the City's downtown redevelopment team travelled to White Plains, New York for a series of meetings on Tuesday with developer Street Works on the status of plans for the $1 billion project.

"We are making progress, and these meetings are part of the evolution of the process," Koch said. "There is a lot of information for all of us to digest, this going to be a very busy year, and it made sense logistically for these meetings to take place in New York."

The city is negotiating a long-term development deal with Street-Works that is anticipated to create thousands of new jobs over the next several years and provide millions of dollars in new tax revenue.

After a series of more than 20 public meetings last year, Koch said he said he expects a similarly substantial public process as the project moves forward.

Raymondi Views Honeywell Transfer As Unfinished Business

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymondi said he hopes to revive the council's investigation of the 2007 wire transfer of $670,000 used to make the first payment to Honeywell International.

"We kind of ran out of time," Raymondi said, referring to the past council session when councillors rejected any further action on the issue, and opposed a detailed report prepared by Chairman John Keenan.

Raymondi said that his questions regarding the wire transfer have not yet been answered and he believes the council should revisit the issue in the next session.

While the City Council's inquiry into that transfer appeared to end Dec. 29, Raymondi said that the new councillors may seek answers on such an important issue.

Keenan's report concluded that no city accounts were debited until six months after the wire transfer and that violated the state's municipal finance laws.

"The payment was made in accordance with the agreement between the City and Honeywell, but was not entered upon the City's ledgers and accounts in conformance with the municipal finance laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Councillors rejected Keenan's report by a 7-2 vote after considering letters submitted by former City Solicitor Robert Quinn and former City Auditor Rick Fitzpatrick.

Both Quinn and Fitzpatrick defended the transaction in their letters and criticized councillors for conducting discussions of the transfer without consulting them.

In his letter, Quinn wrote that the council did approve the funds when they entered into a long-term borrowing contract with Honeywell Financial and that the payment should have been made through the Debt Service account.

"There was nothing illegal or improper with the payment to Honeywell Financial of the $694,637 on Nov. 16," wrote Quinn. "This was a payment on a borrowing authorized by the City Council. Failure to make the payment in a timely manner would have jeopardized the City's credit rating."

Similarly, Fitzpatrick wrote, "I know that we did all we could to pay an obligation of the city with the facts that we had available at the time, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and Massachusetts Municipal Finance laws."

Both former officials asked why the councillors had not invited them to discuss the issues.

As for appearing at any future council meetings, Quinn and Fitzpatrick said that time has passed and they will not attend a council review. Both said their letters provided a full explanation and additional discussion was not necessary.

While Fitzpatrick says the issue is moot, he did encourage the council to "continue its vigilance with its oversight in the Honeywell Energy Performance Contract and all other financial and budgetary issues..."

"However, I would suggest that your efforts would better serve the citizens of the city if they were focused on performance measurement, savings calculations and data collection that will enable to management of the city to budget in the future and recognize the actual performance versus the guaranteed savings."

Raymondi said he would ask that a representative from the auditors, Powers and Sullivan, to explain why the transfer and payment was described as questionable.

The auditors summarized the transfer, "The city paid the lease payment prior to the appropriation order in May 2008..." The transaction was left off the cashbook until the appropriation was voted...and that "could be considered fraud."

The 2010-2011 City Council session will be held Monday.

Whether you are a homeowner, dog owner, or both, you may be surprised to learn how much of a bite our canine friends take out of homeowner's insurance claims. According to a study recently released by the Insurance Information Institute, dog bites compose about one-third of all homeowners insurance liability claims, which totaled $387.2 million in 2008. Just to put these claims into some perspective, the average cost of a dog-bite claim was $24,461. From the injured parties' point of view, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that 4.5 million people are bitten by dogs annually, nearly 900,000 of whom are children requiring medical care. Even normally docile dogs may bite when frightened or protecting their young.

NOTE: The ultimate responsibility for properly training and controlling a dog rests with the owner.

Quincy Chamber Of Commerce Launch Event Jan. 27 At Marriott

The launch for the new Quincy Chamber of Commerce will be held on Wednesday, Jan. 27 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. at the Boston Marriott Quincy.

The evening's honorary guests include Mayor Thomas P. Koch, State Treasurer Timothy Cahill, state Sen. Michael W. Morrissey, state Reps. Bruce J. Ayers, A. Stephen Tobin and Ronald Mariano as well as other state and city elected officials.

The establishment of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce comes as two prominent non-profit organizations in the City of Quincy - Quincy 2000 Collaborative and Discover Quincy - enter into a partnership that combines their respective programs and services under one single entity.

"We are very excited about the new possibilities that will be realized by joining forces and becoming the Quincy Chamber of Commerce," said Edward Keohane, current Chairman and President of Quincy 2000 Collaborative.

"It further strengthens our goal to support our 475 existing members, attract quality commercial investment, and help make our great city a better place in which to live, work, visit and invest," Keohane added.

The Quincy Chamber of Commerce designation also provides better name recognition to service the over 300,000 tourists that visit the Adams National Park annually; the over 6,000 commercial enterprises conducting business in the community daily; and the local, state and federal agencies that support the programs and services undertaken by each organization.

"There is no other name that has the impact and that fittingly describes a 'business' and 'tourism' agency like a 'Chamber of Commerce' designation," said Michael McGurl, current chairman and president of Discover Quincy.

"It is recognized with a distinctive significance apparent to all economic and tourism communities worldwide. The new Quincy Chamber of Commerce is poised and ready as Quincy moves forward to an exciting future," McGurl said.

The event will begin with networking and a cocktail reception-light dinner at 5:30 p.m., followed by a presentation that begins at 6:15 p.m.

Tickets are $25 for members and $35 for nonmembers.

To purchase tickets call (617) 847-1454.

Event sponsors include Brookside House Executive Lodging, Comcast Business Class, Eastern Bank/Eastern Insurance, Granite Telecommunications, Galvin Construction, Harvard Vanguard Medical Associates, Jackrabbit Design, Boston Marriott Quincy, National Parks Services and Wessling Architects. For a complete list of sponsors, visit www.quincy2000.org.

Jean's Pea Soup Extraordinaire

It was a cold dreary day, and I was invited to have dinner with my brother Phil and his daughter Jean.

And although I have made split pea soup many times, Jean's came out with much more flavor. So today's recipe is for that delicious pea soup.

We like pea soup on the chunky side, so Jean did not puree it.

JEAN'S PEA SOUP

1-bag split peas
2 stalks celery (chopped)
2 carrots (sliced)
1 large onion (chopped) vegetable oil for sautéing

salt and pepper to taste
ham bone with chunks of ham cut up

In a large pan, sauté the celery, onion and carrots until onion is translucent. Add the water and the ham bone and cook covered until it comes to a boil. Jean added a bouillon cube for more flavor, but you could also add chicken or any kind of stock instead. Or just the salt and pepper.

When this comes to a boil, add the bag of split peas, and the ham pieces and cook covered on medium heat until peas are tender. It takes about 20 -25 minutes.

We all enjoyed the soup so much on this cold night, and I couldn't wait to share it with all of you.

Palmucci Opposed To Proposed 95-Foot Sign

Ward 4 Councilor Brian Palmucci announces his opposition to a proposal by BJ's Wholesale Club to build a 95-foot sign in South Quincy.

BJ's Wholesale Club is seeking approval from the City of Quincy's Zoning Board of Appeals to allow for a variance to erect a 95-foot pylon sign at their 200 Crown Colony location.

Palmucci said he has notified residents of the proposed sign through a mailing to approximately 500 neighboring households and email to another 400 residents throughout the ward.

Palmucci is encouraging residents who wish to express their support or opposition to attend the public meeting of the Zoning Board regarding this proposal Tuesday, Jan. 26 at 7:15 p.m. in the Council Chambers at City Hall.

Those unable to attend the meeting may send a letter expressing their opinion on the proposal to 55 Sea St., Quincy, MA 02169.

"I have heard from dozens of residents who are vehemently opposed to a sign of this height, especially at one of the gateways to our city," Palmucci said. "I have sent a letter to the ZBA expressing my opposition to this proposal, and will attend the meeting to speak against it on behalf of my constituents."

For more information, call Palmucci at (617) 834-3945 or the Zoning Board directly at 617-376-1933.

Sun, especially his "Sunbeams" column as it was full of history and knowledge of Quincy and the world," Matthes said.

"The untimely passing of Henry W. Bosworth has been a tremendous loss. I did not know Mr. Bosworth personally but got to know him just by reading The Quincy Sun and his 'Sunbeams' column. I can still remember when the newspaper started. My youngest son was a paper-boy," she added.

"It is with a heavy heart – but fittingly so – that Henry is selected as the Citizen of the Year," his son, Robert, said. "Henry had been nominated in the past but always removed his name from consideration because he firmly believed it was more in keeping with the true spirit of the award to recognize some other worthy recipient."

"But we realize without Henry's longstanding dedication to the Quincy community and his unwavering commitment in publishing a weekly newspaper in the city he loved that there would be no Quincy Sun today, let alone a Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year award. So, while the award is bittersweet, it is a tremendous honor that is overwhelmingly deserved," his son added.

Robert Bosworth also praised the other nominees this year. "It is indeed an honor in itself to be nominated for this award. I want to thank the judges for considering all the nominees as well as our readers who submitted the nominations."

Mr. Bosworth was born in Boston, raised in Quincy Point and was educated in Quincy public schools. He graduated from Quincy High School in 1942. It was during his senior year that he began his newspaper career, writing high school sports for The Patriot Ledger.

He served his country in World War II aboard the destroyer U.S.S. Cogswell. After the war, he returned to Quincy and worked for The Ledger and later for The Boston Herald Traveler.

In 1968, Mr. Bosworth set off to fulfill a lifelong dream: start his own weekly newspaper.

On Sept. 26, 1968, that dream came to fruition when the first issue of The Quincy Sun rolled off the presses and hit the street as the city's weekly newspaper. The newspaper's first office was located on the second floor of the old Quincy Conservatory building at 7 Foster St. The business moved a year later to another second floor office above the Kincaide Furniture Store in the Mutual Building on Hancock Street. (That building was later destroyed by fire.)

In February, 1975, the newspaper's office relocated to its present location at 1372 Hancock St., the former Quincy Savings Bank building.

Mr. Bosworth's mission for the newspaper from its inception remains its focus today: to chronicle the city's history and news fairly and accurately. But he also believed in being active in the community and could always be called on to lend a helping hand to any and all worthy causes.

His associations with civic, community, charity, business and professional groups were numerous. He was active in all of them.

Mr. Bosworth was a member and ardent supporter of the Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post of Quincy, the Quincy Sons of Italy, Quincy Lodge of Elks, Quincy-North Quincy Football Hall of Fame and the Veterans Stadium Committee that was instrumental in erecting lights at the city's stadium.

For many years, he served as co-chairman of The Quincy-South Shore Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon. The other chairman: the late Richard Koch who served the city as its longtime director of Park, Cemetery and Forestry Departments. Mr. Bosworth only agreed to serve as co-chairman if Mr. Koch served alongside him.

Together, and with a dedicated corps of volunteers and through the generosity of Quincy-South Shore organizations and residents, the telethon raised more than $1 million for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Mr. Koch, who died in 1987, was honored posthumously with the Sun Citizen of the Year award.

Over the years, Mr. Bosworth was recognized by numerous community groups including the Quincy Historical Society, the American Red Cross, Beechwood on the Bay, United Way, Veterans of Foreign Wars, South Shore YMCA, Quincy Lodge of Elks, Quincy Education Association and the Quincy School-Community Partnership.

He was also honored as the recipient of the James R. McIntyre Humanitarian Award, the Quincy Jewish War Veterans Citizen of the Year and by Maria Droste Services.

He received the Salvation Army's first "Community Service Award."

Mr. Bosworth was a long-time member of the former Quincy Center Business and Professional Association and the recipient of the association's Member of the Year Award.

He served on the Quincy Salvation Army Advisory Board. Many years ago he established a "community leader" kettle manned by local leaders during the holiday season to help raise funds for the needy. The kettle continued this past holiday season and is affectionately known as "Henry's Kettle."

Over the years, he also served on the Quincy Kids Voting Program Executive Committee, Quincy Historical Society Board of Trustees and the South Shore YMCA Board of Directors. He was a past director of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and member of the New England Press Association.

In 1995, Mr. Bosworth received an honorary degree from Quincy College for his contributions to community journalism.

In 2004, he was the recipient of the Richard J. Koch Youth Service Award and served as grand marshal of the city's Flag Day Parade.

Last year, following his untimely death, Mayor Thomas Koch and the City Council dedicated a memorial plaque at City Hall in Mr. Bosworth's honor. He is one of only a handful of individuals to receive such an honor.

Other groups which honored his memory last year include Quincy Medical Center, which renamed its golf tournament last May in Mr. Bosworth's memory; the Ward 5 Community Association which honored him with its own Citizen of the Year award; and the Quincy Rotary Club which named the longtime publisher a Paul Harris Fellow, the club's highest honor.

Mr. Bosworth and his wife, Dorothy M. Bosworth, raised five children: Gail Happel of Weymouth, Linda Harrison of Randolph, Donna Gray of Pembroke, Dolly Newman of Quincy and Robert Bosworth of Halifax.

SOME 80 BRAVE souls head for the chilly water off Wollaston Beach last Saturday for the fourth annual John Hancock Birthday Plunge. The event raised more than $6,500 for the Quincy Interfaith Social Services. Quincy Sun Photos/Robert Noble

Fourth Annual John Hancock Birthday Celebration At Wollaston Beach Raises Over $6,500

80 Take The Plunge For Quincy Interfaith Social Services

By MIRIAM JOSEPH

The air temperature at Wollaston Beach at noon-time last Saturday was 43 degrees. But the water temperature was unknown, as nearly 80 people dove into the Atlantic Ocean in support of the 4th annual John Hancock Plunge.

Sponsored by the Quincy Beaches and Coastal Commission, the Friends of Wollaston Beach, and the State Department of Conservation and Recreation, this event raises funds for Quincy's Interfaith Social Services.

What began in 2007 as a small, sparsely-attended fund raising event at the Mound Street Beach in Quincy Point has grown into something of an extravaganza attended by nearly three hundred participants, family-members, and supporters of ISS, many of whom represented groups ranging from Boston University Police Department to students at Archbishop Williams High School.

According to event coordinator Chickie Abdallah, over $6500 was raised, but she emphasized that donations are still welcome. "This year's turn-out has been mind-boggling. I couldn't believe the wave of people lining the beach.

"Anyone who helped us today, put your head on your pillow tonight knowing that you did something good today. Last year we absolutely froze out here, but this year I'm hoping I got a little bit of a suntan!"

COUNCILLOR JOHN KEENAN (left) is "greeted warmly" by former councillor and John Hancock Plunge organizer Leo Kelly after taking the plunge Saturday.

Fallon Ambulance Service and the Marine Unit of the Quincy Police Dept. were on hand, and in the water, to assure the safety of the plunge participants, who made their way over small mounds of snow before getting wet.

The now-famous 'Dunkin' Toe-Nuts', only five of them this year, were offered first access to the water before the crowd, ranging in age from 5 to 80-something, hit the water with a positive vengeance.

Local merchants like Dunkin' Donuts, Coop's Bar & Grille in Quincy Point, and McKay's Breakfast & Lunch offered gift-certificates as achievement prizes.

The best costume was again won by perennial plunger Mary-Jo Kahler who this year was dressed as a mermaid, tailfin and all.

The prize for youngest plunger went to 5 year-old Thomas Chenette of Houghs Neck, whose mother described him as "a polar bear," and the award for oldest went to octogenarian Jean Ross, another repeat winner.

ISS board member Shirley Dunlap raised $1080 in sponsorships and received an award for most money raised. When asked how she did it, she replied, "I asked all my friends, and half of them advised me not to go in the water, so I just dunked my toe."

Representing the William R. Caddy Detachment of the Marine Corps League were plungers Donald Sharp, Commandant, and Kevin King, a member of the Army Reserves. Over $800 in sponsorship donations were raised by the detachment, nearly doubling last year's figure.

Ken Bambrick, a Houghs Neck resident who raised $225 in sponsorships said, "I've always wanted to do this—the L Street Brownies do it—so when I saw this event advertised and for such a good cause, I was in."

Former Ward 1 Councilor Leo Kelly was beaming with pride at the outpouring of support and announced that John Hancock would have been 273 years old on this birthday. "This is recognition for John Hancock, the greatest patriot, born here in Quincy on the site of the Adams Academy.

"The ISS does a phenomenal job for people in need, people were lined up on along the boulevard, the media was here in full force and everyone has been so generous."

ISS Executive Director Rick Doane expressed his gratitude to all participating organizations and people. "Our volunteers are the heart and soul of our organization, and it's only through events like this that we can keep feeding the hungry people here in Quincy and all over the South Shore.

"60% of our clients come from Quincy and this is where our office is, so it will always be our home, but we want to let everybody on the South Shore know about our resources, so when people are in need they can come to us."

Interfaith Social Services is a private, non-profit, non-sectarian agency serving the residents of Massachusetts' South Shore. Since 1947 ISS has been working to ensure that individuals and families have access to food, clothing, financial assistance, and counseling.

Their programs include The Pantry Shelf, which this year provided food assistance to over 16,000 South Shore residents, a 25% increase over last year's figures. The agency's busy volunteers distributed 25,000 bags of food and assembled 3,958 Thanksgiving meals for those in need last year.

In 2009, ISS saw an 18% rise in the number of families using services from the agency's Homesafe program, which assists families who are at risk of homelessness, or who find themselves in emergency situations.

The New Directions Counseling Center also saw an increase this past year in the number of hours which counselors spent with those who are coping with emotional and mental health obstacles. Offered on a sliding-scale-fee basis, many people who do not have health insurance were helped by this branch of ISS.

And many of those on the move have established some confidence in themselves through The Career Closet, which provides free business attire to individuals who are entering or reentering the workforce.

Quincy Medical Center Interfaith Chaplaincy provides pastoral counseling and support to those suffering the effects of poor health. This program is partially funded by many houses of worship across the South Shore.

The Bureau Drawer Thrift Shop is open to the public and offers affordable clothing for children and adults, as well as books, toys and many other miscellaneous household items. Last year the shop received over 5,000 donations from generous benefactors across the South Shore.

Donations supporting The John Hancock Plunge may be made payable to Interfaith Social Services and mailed to ISS, 105 Adams St., Quincy 02169. For more information on ISS visit www.interfaithsocialservices.org or call 617-773-6203.

A Job Well Done

On Tuesday, Jan. 12, Officers' John McGowan and Bob Bell were dispatched to Atlantic Street to investigate a past assault and battery. Upon arrival, the Officers located a female standing in front of the multi-unit dwelling.

LT. DAN MINTON

In addition to swelling on both cheeks, the female had a cut and an inch long pink mark on her right cheek. She told the officers that she was in her apartment drinking "White Russians" with her boyfriend/roommate and the downstairs female neighbor when she got into a verbal argument with them.

The victim said that she tired of the argument and walked into the living room to "cool off." She said that just as she sat down, the female neighbor (suspect #1) quickly approached her and then struck her with a volley of punches to the face.

The victim stated that her boyfriend/roommate (suspect #2) grabbed a hold of her (victim) and threw her onto the couch. Suspect #2 told suspect #1 to sit on top of the victim, which she did. Suspect #2 then slapped the victim in her face, then walked away, returning seconds later to slap and retreat numerous times.

The victim said that suspect #1 joined in the assault, punching her several times while sitting on her. The victim said that suspect #1 then took a lit cigarette and burned her face with it, showing the Officers the inch long mark on her right cheek. She also exhibited a burn mark from the cigarette on her finger, which was a defensive wound. The victim was allowed to get up from the sofa, but was then "kicked out" of her own apartment without her keys or cell phone.

The victim stated that the incident occurred two hours earlier and she didn't call the Police until another downstairs neighbor urged her to get help. The victim had a strong odor of alcohol on her breath. The officers then proceeded to the apartment and knocked at the door several times announcing that they were Quincy Police Officers and after an extensive period of time, suspect #2 opened the door.

The officers asked him what happened and he said, "Nothing." When asked if they could come into the apartment, suspect #2 refused their request so the Officers asked him to come out to the hallway, which he did.

The officers grabbed suspect #2, a 47 year old Quincy resident and placed him under arrest for Assault and Battery (domestic). With the victim's permission, Officer McGowan entered the apartment and found suspect #1 and placed this 49 year old Quincy resident under arrest for Assault and Battery and Assault and Battery with a dangerous weapon (lit cigarette). Both suspects were transported to the station for booking. The victim was offered medical assistance but she refused.

The victim opted for an emergency restraining order, which was granted by the on-call Judge.

Nice Work!

QUINCY CREDIT UNION: beware of cell and home telephone calls from an automated female voice claiming to represent the Credit Union, stating that there is a problem with your ATM/Debit card requiring immediate attention. The instructions are for you to press #1 to contact the bank's security line.

The officer who received this solicitation said he does not have an ATM card and reported this to the Credit Union, who said that they have had other reports recently. As in all case such as this, do not punch any number to continue the call. Contact the financial institution and explain what occurred.

HUH? A Wollaston resident reported that her vehicle, parked in her driveway, was broken into overnight, at 1:50 A.M. and that the suspects were two white males. She stated that a canvas bag with her GPS unit, power cord, phone power cord and mother's handicap placard were taken. She said that she left the car unlocked overnight.

When asked how she knew about the suspects, she showed the officer a video tape from their home security system! Be sure to lock your doors!

But the excitement of making a home your own can dim the first time you open a cabinet door or look in the oven to realize not everyone shares the same commitment to good house-keeping.

Whether cleaning your new home before moving in, or looking for a way to juggle the increase in housework that comes when you move from an apartment to a larger condo or single-family home, tidying up your environment doesn't have to be a tough or expensive task. Moving into a new place is a great time to start fresh, breaking out of old routines and trying different things, including living a more natural lifestyle at home.

"Moving into a new home can be exciting and overwhelming at the same time, but a few simple steps can ease the transition," says Jen Singer, family lifestyle expert. "Think of it as a clean slate for your family, regardless of whether someone previously lived there."

Start off fresh

It's the dirty little secret of home buying - sometimes the previous owners leave a mess behind when they move out. "Even if they don't leave a mess, you'll still want to give your new home a good cleaning so it truly feels like you're making a fresh start," Singer says.

Before you settle into your new home, dust, mop and scrub everything from the ceiling to the floor. It'll save you from feeling like you're living in someone else's dirt, and give you a brand new start in your new home.

Divvy the chores

You may love the fact that your new home affords you more living space, but with more space comes more chores. Start out by fairly distributing chores among family members.

"It might be fun to play with your new washing machine now, but doing all the laundry all the time will get old fast," Singer says. "So task your spouse with grabbing a natural laundry stain remover that cleans powerfully to tackle tough stains, such as Nature's Source Laundry Stain Remover by Shout. The line also has other natural cleaners I like to use for other chores around the home by trusted brands including Windex and Scrubbing Bubbles. They contain 99 percent or more natural ingredients; and they are affordable and available in many grocery and mass merchandise stores."

Conquer clutter ... before it starts

It's an unwritten law of physics - when you move into a bigger place, your furniture, clothes and other things multiply to take up all the new space. More space and more stuff can add up to clutter and ultimately, more waste.

"Resist the urge to fill your closets and counters with new things," Singer warns. "Instead, look at new ways of using pieces you already own."

Another clutter-cutting tactic - if you just moved boxes that you packed two moves ago and haven't unpacked since, get rid of them. "You may not even want to open them before donating or recycling them," Singer suggests. "After all, whatever is in them is something you've done just fine without for quite a while."

Personalize with paint

Even if the sellers of your new home put a fresh coat of paint throughout the house before they left, repainting is an easy, inexpensive way to personalize your environment. "Don't be afraid to pick colors that are a shade darker than you'd normally go for. You'll be surprised to find how it can show off your personal style," Singer says.

In keeping with your commitment to live naturally, look for low VOC paints, especially if you're repainting in the winter when ventilation will be limited.

'DetermiNation' Key To Keeping Resolutions

Just a few weeks ago, many Americans made a New Year's resolution to loose weight and/or become more physically active to improve their health.

Keeping resolutions can be difficult, but those who plan ahead and set a goal have the best chance for success.

The American Cancer Society can help individuals fulfill their New Year's resolution to get fit through the "DetermiNation" program, which offers opportunities to participate in local endurance events such as marathons, half-marathons, triathlons, and cycling events, that will not only help the individual with a goal to reach that New Year's resolution while reducing their own cancer risk, but to dedicate their training and participation to a lifesaving effort to fight a disease that has already taken too many lives. Veteran athletes and those new to training are encouraged to challenge themselves to find an event, set a goal, and help make every mile more meaningful.

The American Cancer Society DetermiNation endurance event program will provide the support, training, and fundraising tools needed to achieve personal victory - first to raise funds that will help save lives, and then to cross the finish line on race day. While raising money to support the American Cancer Society's efforts to fight the disease, participants receive numerous benefits to help them achieve their personal victories, including free local or group training with Greater Boston Running Company and a 10% discount to its Lexington or Hingham stores, race weekend amenities, fundraising incentive prizes and more. Fundraising commitments vary by event.

In Massachusetts, official race partners include the upcoming Hyannis Marathon, half marathon and 10K (Feb. 28), a Boston Marathon qualifier race. Runners who have qualified and registered for the Boston Marathon (April 19) may also choose to raise funds for the American Cancer Society through DetermiNation. Other DetermiNation events around New England include the Cox Sports Marathon & Willow Tree Half Marathon in Providence, RI (May 2) and the KeyBank Vermont City Marathon in Burlington, VT (May 30).

In addition, the Society will host its second annual Bicycles Battling Cancer, a 75-mile ride from Worcester to Boston, on Sunday, July 25. Interested participants are encouraged to register today at cancer.org/bicyclesbattlingcancer.

DetermiNation was born out of a program called Charity Runner, which began in 1996 by an individual in the American Cancer Society's Illinois Division who wanted to run a marathon in memory of a friend he had recently lost to cancer. Because of the program's rapid growth, the Society has expanded the initiative nationwide to include all types of endurance events.

The American Cancer Society helps people stay well, by preventing cancer or detecting it early; get well, by being in their corner through every step of their cancer experience; by finding cures, through groundbreaking research and treatment discoveries; and by fighting back, through influencing public policy.

For more information, to register, or for volunteer opportunities, visit www.acsdetermination.org, or contact the American Cancer Society 24-hours a day, seven days a week by calling 1-800-227-2345 or visit cancer.org.

The American Cancer Society is a global grassroots force of more than three million volunteers that combines an unyielding passion with nearly a century of experience to save lives and create a world with less cancer and more birthdays by helping people stay well, helping people get well, by finding cures, and by fighting back against the disease.

To Your Good Health
Catch a Chill, Catch a Cold?

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My friend and I have an ongoing discussion about how we catch colds. I believe the only way is by being exposed to a germ. My friend agrees, but also says you can become chilled, and that results in a cold. Please settle this once and for all. -L.G.

ANSWER: The only way to catch a cold is to meet up with a cold virus. But let's kick this around a little while it lies there quivering.

Rhinoviruses are responsible for many colds. This virus is passed from one person to another most often via the hands and fingers. An infected person invariably will have virus on his or her hands and fingers. If that person touches another person's hands or fingers, the virus is transferred. All the second person has to do is touch his or her nose or eyes and the virus has found a new home. (The drainage channel for tears siphons viruses into the nose.) It's also possible to spread a cold through sneezing or coughing, but that's a secondary route.

Many colds are preceded by a body chill. That's part of the infection symptoms, and that might be what your friend refers to.

Once a virus lands in a person's nose, the time till the development of cold symptoms is short - eight to 12 hours. Runny nose, nasal stuffiness, scratchy throat, cough and sneezing are typical symptoms. They peak in 48 hours and are gone in about one week. A person is most contagious during the first three days of symptoms, when nasal discharge is at high volume and when it contains the most viruses.

If by "chilling" your friend means being in a cold blast of air or getting your feet wet in frigid weather and shivering as a result, she has a slight point. That kind of chilling constricts the nose's blood vessels and decreases mucus production. It might, therefore, permit cold viruses to mount a more effective attack and can contribute to the ease of catching a cold. All the same, without the virus there is no cold.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am 34 and have been jogging for 10 years. I do it year-round.

I've noticed this winter that my knees feel stiff before I run. They don't hurt during the run or after. Could this be a sign that I'm getting arthritis? -B.C.

ANSWER: It's not likely that at age 34 you're coming down with arthritis. It's more likely a weather thing. Cold weather thickens joint fluid. That makes joints stiff. Warming the fluid by exercise relieves the stiffness.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: As a calorie counter from way back, will I lose weight if I eat 1,500 calories a day? How about if I eat 1,200 calories one day and 1,800 the next? -K.T.

ANSWER: If you burn more than 1,500 calories a day but take in only 1,500 calories, you should lose weight.

You can still lose if one day you take in slightly more and the next day slightly less. You can count the calorie deficit over a week's time.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

Chiropractor

THE REST OF THE STORY

Patients whose movements are restricted may be inclined to rest rather than actively engage in exercise or even daily pursuits. The most extreme form of this self-imposed sedentary approach to dealing with injury or a chronic condition is bed rest, which has recently been roundly criticized. Health professionals have largely come to the conclusion that bed rest, which is more of a quick-fix, home-remedy solution, actually does more long-term harm than good. The longer patients stay off their feet, the weaker their muscles are likely to get, which poses some potentially serious problems. A better approach rests with slow but determined efforts aimed at increasing muscle strength, flexibility, circulation, and function, which chiropractic treatment is specifically designed to facilitate.

Chiropractic care can help with any number of symptoms and problems. Everybody benefits from chiropractic care a little differently, but one thing everybody has in common is that they just feel better. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we are committed to health and want to eliminate sickness, pain and suffering through a healthy balanced lifestyle, wellness education, and natural alternative health care. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where we will inform you about the services we offer and hopefully answer any questions you may have. Strong Start Propelled Quincy To Victory

Presidents Knock Out Red Raiders, 63-32

By SEAN BRENNAN

The Quincy Presidents landed the first blow (a 20-3 first quarter lead), the second blow (a 33-12 halftime advantage) and finally the knockout blow (a 31 point win) en-route to a commanding 63-32 victory over the North Quincy Red Raiders last Friday in an intercity matchup at North Quincy High School.

Quincy (7-4 overall), a team that has depth up-and-down its bench, was relentless from the opening tip and jumped out to a 16-1 lead before North Quincy knew what had hit them.

The impressive start was the key to victory in this game and it set the tone for what would be an easy win.

"(We) talked, after a couple of our recent losses that confidence was an issue," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch. "We needed to start playing with more confidence and aggressiveness. This team heeded that call and they came together in this game. This team has started to find its role, they have come together and it showed with the way we started this game."

Leading the first quarter charge was senior captain Leslie Campbell (ten first quarter points). Campbell was everywhere. She scored on a layup to open the scoring, she scored from inside the paint and from the perimeter and she did a fine job of finding open teammates for easy buckets. Her play, and the attention that North Quincy's defenders gave her, allowed junior guard Kori Sorensen (five first quarter points) and seniors Olivia Berry and Colleen Tobin to produce as well.

"Leslie has been a four-year varsity starter for us," said Bretsch about his senior captain. "This season she has taken on a leadership role. She has stepped up for us in those tough situations when we need a big score, and she has scored plenty of tough buckets.

"I told her after the game that she had played like a senior captain should play in a North Quincy/Quincy game. She was great tonight."

In the second quarter, the Red Raiders scored the first four points (20-7), but after a Sorensen three-pointer upped the score to 25-9, Quincy allowed just a Devon McKay two-pointer the rest of the half. Sorensen (12 points) buried another three-pointer right before the break to give the Presidents a commanding 33-12 advantage.

Trailing by 21 points entering the third quarter, the Raiders were outscored 15-5 in the quarter as Quincy emptied their bench, at one point playing a lineup of all underclassmen. The Red Raiders did finish strong, scoring 15 points in the fourth quarter, but it was not enough as the Presidents rolled to victory.

"We have a lot of talented players on this team," said Bretsch. "But they are now starting to play as a team. You can see it. They are supporting each other; they like playing together and they all make each other better.

"We have an incredible amount of depth. These kids are having fun playing basketball and that is great to watch. All of them are out there trying to do the best for the team. That is the idea, but that doesn't happen too often. But, it is happening with these kids. I am proud of them."

LOCKED ARM AND ARM: The Quincy Presidents scored early and often against North Quincy and won 63-32. The victory improved Quincy's record to 7-4 overall.

Game Notes: Leslie Campbell led all scorers with 18 points... Kori Sorensen and Colleen Tobin each chipped in with 12 points each... North Quincy's Cara Murtagh was the leading scorer for the Red Raiders with 10 points... With the loss, North Quincy's record fell to 1-10 overall... Despite playing on their home court, North Quincy was the away team against Quincy.

Team Notes: Quincy improved to 6-2 in Patriot League play following their win over North Quincy... The Presidents played Plymouth South HS on Monday and Whitman-Hanson on Wednesday. The team is set to play at NQHS on Friday against Scituate HS... North Quincy is winless in the Patriot League... The Red Raiders will host Pembroke HS on Friday (7 p.m.)... North Quincy has back-to-back road games on Jan. 29 (Rockland HS) and Feb. 1 (Hingham HS).

QRD Announces Girls Soccer Skills Program

The Quincy Recreation Department announced last week that it is once again conducting an eight-week Soccer Skills Program for girls as part of its evening recreation gym program.

This program, according to Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, will feature activities and instruction to improve the fundamental soccer skills of each youngster; the participants will also take part in mini-games.

The program is offered on Monday nights starting Jan. 25 and there are two separate sessions. The girls Grades 5-7 program will be held from 6-7 p.m. at Broad Meadows Middle School and the girls Grades 8-11 will be held from 7:30-9 p.m. at the same location.

Don Martin, head girls' soccer coach at QHS, will direct the program. Members of the QRD staff will assist Martin. Registration will be taken on the first night of the program and it will be limited; after the registration period, participants will begin their first night of training.

All participants are required to wear sneakers and appropriate gym attire.

The program is set to conclude on March 22 and there will be no program on Presidents Day (Feb. 15).

For additional information, please call the QRD at 617-376-1394 or go online to www.QuincyRec.com.

Close Game Ends In Blow Out

Red Raiders Outlast Presidents, 64-49

By SEAN BRENNAN

An overflow crowd at North Quincy High School watched as the Red Raiders fell behind early (8-7 Quincy first quarter lead) only to storm back during the second and third quarters to come away with a convincing, 64-49, victory over the Quincy Presidents last Friday night in a Patriot League showdown.

Friday's win marked North Quincy's second straight over Quincy this season. The Red Raiders had previously defeated the Presidents, 61-59, over the Christmas break in the third-place game of the John Adams Basketball Classic.

Quincy (4-5 overall), in this game, got an early jump on North Quincy (6-6 overall). The Presidents, playing an aggressive style of defense, held a one-point lead after one quarter, but the Red Raiders responded with an 8-0 scoring run to open the second quarter to go ahead 15-8. Trailing by seven points, the Presidents regained the lead following their own 8-0 scoring run at 16-15.

With just under four minutes to play before the half-time break, North Quincy began another scoring run, and this streak, would effectively put the contest out of reach. The Red Raiders, behind the solid play of senior captains Johnathan Coates (game-high 15 points) and Michael Stanton (11 points, 15 rebounds), outscored Quincy 20-7 over a six-minute period between the second and third quarters, and the Presidents could never recover.

"It all starts with the play and leadership of the seniors and Stanton and Coates have provided that leadership we have been looking for," said NQHS head coach Kevin Barrett. "It helps to have a player like Mike who can be counted on to score double digit points and grab double digit rebounds. And the same can be said for Johnathan. He has really stepped up his game. He has always been a great scorer but now he is also giving us a great effort on defense and rebounding the ball. These two have really carried the team recently."

At the end of three quarters of play, North Quincy had upped its lead to 46-32. The Presidents inched closer in the final eight minutes behind the shooting of senior captain Kenny Nguyen (15 points), but the Raiders held on for the victory.

"We have been getting it done with defense," said Barrett about the continued success of his Red Raiders this winter. "Besides this big win over Quincy, we have been working on holding teams to under 50 points a game. That is our goal each time out and it has been working for us. Against Quincy, we focused on the outside shooters and recognized where they were on the court and we did a nice job of shutting them down as the game moved along."

"The return of guys like Chris Delaney and Tim Liuzzo has given our bench more depth. Delaney's return has let us put Mike Morrison back at his off-guard position and Liuzzo's length at power forward has also given us more options."

"And the experience that some other players got when these guys were out has given the team, and especially the bench, more quality and has given me more weapons."

At 6-6 overall, North Quincy is inching towards the post-season. The team is also right back in the mix for a shot at the Patriot League championship.

"Getting back to .500 and having our team start to get healthy has gotten us back into the position to challenge for the Patriot League championship," said Barrett. "That is one of our goals. Our second goal is to qualify for the state tournament and with six wins and plenty of games left to play, we are in decent shape there as well."

Game Notes: Coates and Stanton received scoring help from junior guard Mike Morrison (12 points)... Red Raider sophomore guard Matt Costa hit a running layup as time expired at the half to give North Quincy a 27-21 lead... NQ senior guard Chris Delaney and sophomore forward Tim Liuzzo, both recently back from injuries, played significant minutes against Quincy... Quincy senior Cedric Dybaud scored 14 points for the Presidents in defeat... Junior forward Oliver O'Sullivan (11 points) connected on three straight three-pointers in the second quarter...

The stands at North Quincy High School were filled to capacity by tip-off.

Team Notes: The Red Raiders will next play on Friday night at Pembroke HS... North Quincy is scheduled to host home tilts against Rockland HS (Jan. 29) and Hingham HS (Feb. 1), both games start at 7 p.m... The Presidents played against Whitman-Hanson HS on Tuesday night... Quincy is scheduled to travel to Scituate HS on Friday... Quincy is set to host Duxbury HS on Jan. 25 at 6:30 p.m. at NQHS.

QUINCY'S LUKAS McDONOUGH looks to get around North Quincy's Matt Costa during last Friday's Patriot League game at NQHS. The Red Raiders won 64-49.

Quincy/NQ Sunk In Pool By Middleboro

Visiting Middleboro High School downed the Quincy/North Quincy boys' swimming/diving team last Thursday, 82-64, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool.

Despite the loss, Q/NQ's Ray Cheung, in only his second meet of the winter, collected first-place honors in the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 1:23/10. The senior captain also finished third in the 500-yard freestyle (7:46.57).

Senior Ed Ng's time of 2:37.62 earned him second-place in the 200-yard freestyle event.

Q/NQ's record now stands at 1-6 overall.

Girls Swimming/Diving Quincy/North Quincy (2-5 overall) cut the deficit to nine points entering the final two events, but could not complete the comeback, falling to visiting Middleboro High School, 89-76, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Jan. 14.

Freshman Kat O'Connor earned a season-best time of 27.82 in the meet's fourth event, the 50-yard freestyle, breaking the 28-second barrier for the first time this season. O'Connor also placed second in the 100-yard freestyle, swimming a time of 1:02.94.

Junior captain Kendra Johnston won the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:08.57. Johnston also won the 100-yard butterfly event with a time of 1:14.78. Team captain Hannah Flattery took second in the same event with a time of 1:18.57.

Quincy/North Quincy will swim at Hingham High School today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m.

Q/NQ Track Drops Two

The Quincy/North Quincy girls' track team lost both ends of a tri-meet with Duxbury and Hingham High Schools; Q/NQ lost to Duxbury, 60-40, and to Hingham, 67-33.

Despite the losses, Q/NQ's Erica Brady continued her undefeated status by taking the one-mile and two-mile race, the latter in an exciting race with Emily Regan, racing in lockstep before outsprung Regan and clocking a Patriot League best time of 11:50. Brady's time in the two-mile is the fourth fastest in Division 1 this winter.

Mary Schwartz also had a big day. She qualified for the State Meet in the 1000-meters by running a time of 3:19.1. Freshman Shannon McCleary won in the hurdles against Duxbury with her best time of the season (10.88).

The Q/NQ shot putters swept Duxbury. Si-Han Huang, Kaleigh McKeon and Christina Doherty took the top three spots and in the javaye shot put, Sarah Spargo threw 23'02".

Rose Bennett (high jump, long jump and hurdles), Lia Bonoli (600-meters) and Danielle Paschall (long jump) also scored in the tri-meet.

The team is expected to enter several athletes in the Division 1 State Relays on Jan. 24.

IMPORTANT CHANGE NOTICE FROM QYH

The Quincy Youth Hockey Board of Directors recently voted to move our registration to January 28th, 29th and 30th. You must register your player during these dates to be placed on a 2010/2011 team (no house waivers will be granted for this season).

The Annual Meeting will be held January 5, 2010 at 7pm here at the arena - nominations for new board members will be taken at this meeting.

Epiphany Lights At Union Congregational

Union Congregational Church, 136 Rawson Rd., Wollaston, will continue to display its Christmas decorations and lights until Ash Wednesday, Feb. 17, announces the Rev. John Swanson, church pastor.

Specifically, exterior white lights on the perimeter fence and interior white lights in the Chancel area will remain, as will a number of strings of lights in the office and upstairs function room.

"I've always found January and February to be cold and dark, not only because they are in the depth of winter, but also because they remind us how long winter is," Rev. Swanson said. "On the church calendar, January and February make up the season of Epiphany, the season of light, where the church celebrates the arrival of the Christ Child as the light shining in the darkness.

"What better way to acknowledge this then to keep the lights up," the pastor added.

The Epiphany Lights will come down on Ash Wednesday, Feb. 17.

Sunday service at Union Church is at 10 a.m. Women's Bible Study and Tuesday School for children and youth are Tuesday at 12:30 p.m.

Prayer groups meet Monday at 8:30 a.m. and Thursday at 6 p.m. Men's group meets Sunday at 7 p.m.

The public is invited to all events. For more information, call 617-479-6661.

Quincy Community United Methodist

Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston, Sunday worship service is at 10:30 a.m. with Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden.

Challenges Facing Jewish Fathers Topic Jan. 31

"The Challenges and Dilemmas Facing Jewish Fathers" will be the topic of Rabbi and author Joseph Meszler, spiritual leader of Temple Sinai in Sharon, as the guest speaker at Temple Shalom, of Milton's monthly Breakfast Lecture Series Sunday, Jan. 31.

The breakfast will begin at 9:30 a.m. with the speaker starting approximately 10:15 a.m. A $5 donation is requested to defray costs, and a call to the temple office would help in planning.

Temple Shalom is located at 180 Blue Hill Ave. (Rte. 138) in Milton. It is handicapped accessible, and has ample parking.

The event is open to all. Rabbi Meszler's mission is to "widen the tent... and deepen the pegs" of the Jewish people—that is to help the Jewish community grow, thrive and deepen its connection to God.

He is a noted educator and has been a contributor to books on the subjects including The New Jewish Feminism and the Modern Men's Torah Commentary. He is the author of A Man's Responsibility: A Jewish Guide to Being a Son, a Partner in Marriage a Father, and a Community Leader.

ENC Faculty To Edit Journal On Faith, History

Two Eastern Nazarene College history professors have been selected by the Conference on Faith and History (CFH) to become the next editors of its scholarly journal.

ENC Professor Emeritus Donald Yerxa and Associate Professor Randall Stephens will become editor and associate editor, respectively, of Fides et Historia, a journal that investigates the relationship between the Christian faith and historical studies. Published twice a year, the journal also presents scholarly research that it is informed by Christian faith commitments.

Previously published at Michigan's Calvin College, Fides et Historia will now be based at ENC, which will collaborate with Point Loma Press on its physical publication. The first ENC-produced Fides will be the journal's Summer/Fall 2011 issue.

ENC President Corlis McGee welcomed the editorial offices of Fides et Historia to the ENC campus.

"This is a continuation of Eastern Nazarene's rich historical tradition," McGee said. "From professors Timothy Smith to Charles Akers to longtime History Department Chair James Cameron, ENC has distinguished itself as a place where history scholars have inspired generations of students to achieve academic excellence and attain professional prominence."

Tu B'Shvat Sedar Jan. 31

The Jewish holiday of Tu B'Shvat will be celebrated with a seder led by Navah Levine Sunday, Jan. 31 at 10 a.m. at Temple Beth El, 1001 Hancock St., Quincy.

Those planning to attend should contact the Temple at 617-479-4309 by Jan. 27.

All are welcome.

Tu B'Shvat celebrates the New Year of the Trees. Over the centuries, the holiday has taken on multiple meanings and evolved into a Jewish mystical and environmental holiday.

In the 17th century, the Kabbalists developed a special seder for Tu B'Shvat with various kinds of fruit and the fruit of the vine.

Houghs Neck Congregational

Houghs Neck Congregational Church, 310 Manet Ave., will hold its regular weekly worship service Sunday, Jan. 24 at 9:30 a.m. Pastor John Casticum will preach the sermon "Spiritual Gifts."

All are welcome to attend.

Paula Younie and Dick Robbins will serve for the Diaconate. Fellowship coffee hour will be held following the service.

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

A reader sent me the following poem by an Unknown Author and we would like to share it with you...

If with pleasure you are viewing
Any work a man is doing
And you like him, or you love him, say it now!
Don't withhold your approbation
'Till the parson makes oration
And he lies with snow lilies o'er his brow.
For no matter how you shout it

He won't really care about it
He won't know how many fear drops you have shed.
If you think some praise is due him
Now's the time to hand it to him
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead!
More than fame and more than money
Is the comment kind and sunny
And the hearty warm approval of a friend;
Oh! it gives to life a savor
And strengthens those who waver
And it gives one heart and courage to the end.
If one earns your praise - bestow it!
If you like him - let him know it!
Let the words of true encouragement be said:
Let's not wait 'till life is over,
And he lies beneath the clover
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

There is no substitute for praise from a well-meaning and good heart.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Mixed signals could create problems. Make sure your views are presented clearly, and insist others do the same. Don't let an unanswered question go by without a full explanation.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Financial pressures ease, allowing for more budget flexibility. But as the money-wise Bovine will appreciate, thrift still beats out splurging. Expect news from someone special.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Getting things done is what you do so well. But be careful not to overtax your energy reserves. Take time out to relax or to do something different to help keep them at optimum levels.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) This is a good time to satisfy the Moon Child's growing sense of wanderlust. Choose a really special place to go to, with a very special person to share it all with you.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You love being in the spotlight. But be careful it doesn't blind you to the truth behind a seemingly wonderful opportunity. Look closer and you might be sadly surprised at what you find.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Isn't it time to take a break from your hectic schedule? Sure it is. And the sooner you do, the sooner you can return fresh and more ready to take on all those new projects.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A recent family incident can help bring everyone closer, and there's no one who's better at making that happen than you. Accept (indeed, insist on!) help from others to get things off and running.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Long-held habits are often difficult to break. But the change from how you always did things to how you can do them now can be liberating. So, be flexible and give it a try.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Someone you met in your professional world last year and thought you would never hear from again could make a sudden reappearance in your life, along with an interesting job offer.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Once again, you delight everyone by coming up with a solution for a problem that actually works. On another note, it's not too early to get started on those travel plans.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Before you go ahead with finalizing your plans for your new project, check them over to see if you can make some improvements or if you can find ways to cut costs.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) The Fabulous Fish might have been out of the social swim for too long, and it's time you plunge back in. Reinforce your old friendships and be open to starting new ones.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your creative talents help bring beauty to the world and the people in it. On their behalf, thank you.

AMONG THE 45 sign holders showing support for Scott Brown at the intersection of Sea Street and Southern Artery Monday were two former mayors, Jim Sheets (right) and Frank McCauley and his daughter, Quincy GOP City Committee Chairwoman Jennifer McCauley Logue.

tarian candidate Joseph L. Kennedy, no relation to the late senator's prominent political family, received 325 votes or just over 1 percent here. There were also 26 write-ins and 76 blanks.

Brown bested Coakley in 20 out of 30 precincts here. Coakley captured only Ward 1 Precinct 2 (Germantown); Ward 1 Precinct 3 (downtown and Crane Public Library); Ward 2 Precinct 3 (Martensen Street); Ward 3 Precinct 2 (Wollaston Hill); Ward 3 Precinct 5 (Montclair); Ward 4 Precinct 5 (South Quincy); Ward 5 Precinct 1 (Adams Street area); Ward 5 Precinct 2 (Wollaston Center); Ward 5 Precinct 3 (Wollaston) and Ward 6 Precinct 4 (Norfolk Downs).

Brown's three most decisive victories by precinct came in Ward 4 Precinct 3 (751 to 465 votes or 61.31 percent to 37.96 percent); Ward 6 Precinct 5 (916 to 579 votes or 60.62 percent to 38.32 percent); and Ward 1 Precinct 4 (799 to 545 votes or 58.79 percent to 40.10 percent).

Turnout in Quincy was 52.43 percent or 29,364 of the city's 56,003 registered voters. That number includes 1,270 absentee ballots. City Clerk Joseph Shea attributed the higher than expected turnout to an electorate energized in part by the senate race's implications on national issues, namely health care. Brown, during the campaign, had pledged to vote against the plan being pushed by President Obama. The senator-elect will become the 41st Republican senator, therefore denying Democrats the 60 votes needed to advance legislation to the Senate floor for disposition if those votes follow party lines.

"This special election became a national race, not just a state-wide race," Shea said shortly after the final Quincy vote was tallied at 9 p.m. at City Hall. "I think the race became a referendum on national health care."

Local Republicans called Brown's victory "a wake-up call to Washington."

"Conventional wisdom said he didn't have a chance, but Scott proved that voters still appreciate a candidate who is willing to roll up his sleeves, work hard and fight for working families – not the special interests who were counting on a Coakley victory," said Jennifer Logue, chairwoman of the Quincy Republican City Committee.

"On a larger scale, Scott's campaign has not only energized Massachusetts voters, but also ignited a populist movement across the nation that seeks to hold Congress accountable for its decisions on important issues like health care and the economy. As it said on a sign I saw at a Scott Brown rally this weekend, it was 'The Scott Heard 'Round the World!'" Logue added.

Brown becomes the first Republican to be elected U.S. Senator from the Bay State since former Sen. Edward Brooke was elected in 1966 and re-elected in 1972. Sen. John Kerry holds that seat.

The Senate seat Brown won Tuesday had been in Democratic hands for 57 years.

Democrat John F. Kennedy defeated incumbent Republican Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. in 1952 to win the seat. Six years earlier, Lodge had defeated the first Democrat to hold that seat – David I. Walsh from Fitchburg – in 1946.

JFK held the seat until he was elected President in 1960. After Benjamin A. Smith II was appointed to fill out the balance of JFK's Senate term, Ted Kennedy was elected senator in a special election in 1962. The "Liberal Lion" was elected nine times and was the fourth-longest-serving senator in U.S. history.

That same Senate seat has "local political roots" as well. John Quincy Adams, as a member of the Federalist Party, held the seat from March 4, 1803 to June 8, 1808. He was later elected the sixth President of the United States.

After 60 Years In Russell Doucette's Study: Chair Belonging To Gen. George Kenney On Display At MacArthur Museum

By JOE REARDON

When World War II ended, Squantum's Russell Doucette brought a handsome, leather chair back home with him. It sat in his study for more than 60 years.

Now, the historic chair is heading home.

The chair will be displayed at the General Douglas MacArthur Museum Brisbane. The building was the former AMP building where MacArthur and General George Kenney worked. The museum is on the floor where MacArthur's office was located.

The chair belonged to Kenney, the Commanding General of the Allied Air Forces in the South West Pacific Area during the Second World War.

"Great people like myself have sat in the chair," said Doucette's widow, Eunice, with a laugh. "It's (moving to the museum) sort of materialized now."

"It started there and it should go back there."

Doucette, a Captain in the USA Air Force, was a member of the 22nd Bomb Group of the 5th Air Force. Doucette was in Headquarters Command with Kenney in Brisbane.

General Kenney was a key figure in the war in the Pacific. Born in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia on August 6, 1889, his military career started when World War I broke out and he enlisted as a flying cadet.

Kenney received his commission as a 1st Lieutenant in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps Reserve in 1917. He saw action in France and Germany from 1917 to 1919.

Kenney had an illustrious war record. He was appointed as the Assistant Attaché for Air in Paris in 1940 and later appointed Commanding General of the 4th Air Force in 1942. Kenney continued to climb the military ranks with his appointment as Commanding General of the Allied Air Forces in the South West Pacific Area before being appointed the Commanding General of the 5th Air Force later in 1942.

When the 5th and 13th Air Forces were combined to form the Far East Air Force (FEAF), Kenney was appointed as the commander of the new Air Force.

He was decorated with the DSC with Cluster, DSM, Silver Star, DFC and a Purple Heart. Kenney was 88 when he died in 1977.

Near the end of the war, Doucette, who was Kenney's representative of affairs, was sent back to Brisbane to close down the headquarters. He acquired the chair that Kenney sat in at headquarters during the war.

The chair was packed in a custom-made container and recently shipped overseas for $600.

Home Rule Petition Calls For Fines Of $100, $200, $300

Coughlin: Ban Drivers From Texting

By LAURA GRFFIN

City Council President Kevin Coughlin Monday asked fellow councillors to support a Home Rule petition banning texting while driving in the City of Quincy.

Under Coughlin's proposal, violators would be prohibited from sending, reading or writing a text message while operating a motor vehicle.

Violators would be fined from $100, $200, to $300 for first, second and third offenses, according to Coughlin who said the fines were minimal compared to federal finer for the same offenses.

Coughlin referred to prohibitions announced Tuesday that ban drivers of commercial vehicles from texting with fines beginning at $2750 per incident.

The federal ban was announced just 12 hours after Coughlin submitted his petition to City Council.

Coughlin said he had two chilling experiences with texting drivers on city streets.

Expected To Begin This Year Parkway Construction Bids Advertised

Mayor Thomas Koch says it's official: After more than three decades on the City's drawing board, construction of a four-lane parkway through the heart of Quincy Center is now formally advertised for public bid with construction expected to begin this year.

The combined federal, state and local project, known for years as the Quincy Center Concourse, has long been viewed as vital rejuvenating downtown and it is a cornerstone of the City's current $1 billion Quincy Center redevelopment plan, officials said.

The $8 million final phase of the parkway project will cut a new roadway directly across Hancock Street, creating an East-to-West connection through Quincy Center from McGrath Highway to Burgin Parkway and the Southeast Expressway. Bids will be opened on Feb. 23, and a separate bid on

City Census Forms In Mail This Week

The city is mailing out about 44,000 census forms this week.

City Clerk Joseph Shea said the census information is used to generate a street-by-street listing of residents and to compile jury and voting lists.

The census information is also used for fiscal planning, to help predict school enrollments and to get federal aid and reimbursements.

This year's census information will also contribute to the U.S. federal census which is conducted every 10 years.

According to state law, each city and town in Massachusetts must conduct an annual census separate from the federal census.

20-30 Tanks Inside 23,000-Square Foot Building Aquarium Holding Area At Former Shipyard Warehouse

By JOE REARDON

The Quincy Shipyard will have sharks, penguins, stingrays and other sea life on its premises in the near future.

At a press conference Tuesday in Warehouse No. 1, Jay Cashman announced the New England Aquarium would be leasing the 23,000 square-foot building to be used as an off-site holding area for sea mammals and fish where they will be quar-antined for any sickness or disease before they are reacquainted with sea life at the aquarium.

Work on the facility is expected to begin in the next couple of weeks and will include between 20-30 tanks, the largest being 30-feet in diameter and 6-feet deep. The facility will also include loading and work zones and exam rooms. It will become operational this summer and expanded by the fall, where an estimated 25-250 endangered sea turtles will be quarantined. The animals will be collected from various locations in the U.S.

"Cashman is pleased to welcome such a well-known organization like the New England Aquarium to the Quincy Shipyard," said Cashman, owner and CEO of Cashman Inc. "The aquarium's off-site holding and rescue operations will

Replaces Warren Sproul

Koch Names Puleo City Finance Director

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday that Nicholas Puleo, a top state financial advisor for the last several years and a former Quincy School Committee member, will join his leadership team as director of Municipal Finance.

Puleo, most recently the Chief of Staff of the Office of Senate President Pro Tempore and lead staffer for the Legislature's Municipal Relief Commission, will be sworn in Feb. 8. He will replace Warren Sproul, the City's first municipal finance director under a financial reform plan begun by Koch in 2008.

"I am grateful for Warren's service starting on the ground floor of a new department, making a number of needed changes, and helping us tackle the many challenges we faced financially," Koch said. "It is time for us to move in a different direction, and Nick is a remarkably talented young man, hard worker and creative thinker with a great knowledge of municipal finance."

The Mayor continued: "We are proud of the progress made to date to right our ship, open our books, and find new efficiencies that allowed us to make millions of dollars in spending cuts while protecting critical services. That progress needs to continue as we work through this historic economic crisis, and Nick is the right person for the job right now."

A lifelong Wollaston resident, Puleo held a number of prominent positions on Beacon Hill that placed him directly at the intersection of state finances and local government over the last several years.

As Senate President Pro Tempore Stanley Rosenberg's Chief of Staff, he was a lead Legislative staffer on the Special Commission on Municipal Relief, which last year made a series of recommendations aimed at helping cities and towns weather the current economic crisis and protect local services against future downturns. A number of those recommendations became state policy, and several more are still being reviewed.

Puleo moved to Rosenberg's office after serving as the Deputy Budget Director for the State Executive Office of Elder Affairs, where he was responsible for developing a budget totaling more than $300 million. He also served as a Communications Director and Senior Fiscal Policy Analyst for the Senate Ways and Means Committee, where he coordinated parts of the state budget totaling more than $3 billion annually.

"This is a tremendous opportunity, and I am grateful to Mayor Koch for placing the confidence in me to help make his vision for our City's future a reality," Puleo said. "Working with both state and local budgets, I understand the challenges we face and that we need to be creative, that we have to be ready for tough decisions, that we must find ways to work more efficiently and that we must be prepared to talk honestly and openly about our finances with the community. I am greatly looking forward to the challenge."

As a member of the School Committee from 2008 until this month after deciding not to run in last year's City election, Puleo helped shape last year's Quincy Public Schools budget, which required cutbacks in several areas but largely protected classroom services.

"Working with him on the school budget, it was obvious he knows the numbers cold, knows how to find solutions and is not afraid to ask questions or make difficult decisions," said Koch. "Above all, Nick cares about Quincy."

Raymondi Proposes Quicker Settlements On City Lawsuits

Cites Civil Service Decision

By LAURA GRIFFIN

At Monday's City Council meeting, Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi read scathing passages from a January Civil Service Commission decision which blasted city officials for bypassing a legitimate candidate for promotion in the Quincy Police Department.

"This is one of those outrageous cases," said Raymondi of the report which specifically cites actions by then Mayor William Phelan and Robert Crowley, Chief of Police at the time.

When Raymondi finished his remonstrance and references to the Civil Service Commission's findings, he urged city officials to settle the potential lawsuit out of court in an effort to save hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In the case Raymondi cited, Civil Service Commissioners determined that Phelan and Crowley deliberately bypassed Sgt. Edward Kusser, a legitimate candidate for lieutenant, in favor of less qualified candidates with ties to then Phelan.

"The unacceptable bias that contaminated the process involved the fact that three of the candidates for lieutenant were relatives of the sitting mayor. Despite this fact, Mayor Phelan initially interviewed all candidates for the position."

"Following that interview, Chief Crowley specifically told the Appellant (Kusser) that he and the mayor had decided not to promote him. The subsequent interview with the two outside chiefs merely camouflaged the stated intent of the appointing authority."

The Civil Service officials acknowledged the discipline of Kusser 20 years earlier. In that incident, Kusser failed to file a timely report when four fellow officers engaged in disruptive activity at Marina Bay.

"While stale and overturned discipline of the Appellant was used to justify his bypass, recent and far more egregious discipline was overlooked to promote two officers to sergeant and appoint two others to special assignments."

Commissioners concluded, "The City has not met its burden of proving that there was a reasonable justification for bypassing (Kusser) for the position of lieutenant."

As a result of the commission findings, Kusser is now at the top of the lieutenant list.

However, Raymondi stated Monday that it is unlikely an opening will occur before Kusser's retirement in less than two years.

"This person has been wronged and severely damaged by our city," said Raymondi after noting that recent litigation "turned a $50,000 case into a $500,000 case."

"If we have to pay for lawyers, shame on all of us," Raymondi said.

Raymondi asked the legal department to prepare a list of all lawsuits valued at $50,000 or more and recommended that the city considering settling such actions prior to court.

Neither Phelan nor Crowley could be contacted prior to The Quincy Sun deadline.

Laforest Wants City On Facebook, Twitter

Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest said Monday that it's time for the City of Quincy to develop its own Facebook site so that officials can tweet important messages, such as road closures or emergencies, on Twitter.

Laforest introduced the resolution Monday at her first City Council meeting as another "option to connect with citizens."

Currently, Mayor Thomas Koch has a Facebook page, but Laforest believes a city site would be more neutral and effective for communication.

Laforest co-sponsored her resolve with Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro and the councillors also asked that city officials offer a demonstration of the new constituent services database within 30 days.

In addition, Laforest filed a resolution asking that all council rules be reviewed and amended to "gender-neutral" wording. Laforest listed 12 offending references in council rules.

NOT-SO-BASIC BLACK

One of the most subtle yet eye-catching trends in men's wristwatches is the all-black watch. This look goes far beyond black faces and straps to include black numerals, black hands, and black stems. The preferred finish for this black-on-black-on-black look is matte. The result is an elegant, monochromatic (or non-chromatic, actually) piece of sculptural beauty that looks as much at home on a wrist dressed with cufflinks as on the golf links. While there is nary a hint of white (some black-on-black wristwatches feature minute bits of white on the hands, numerals, or date), black wristwatches seem to draw as much attention as a French impressionist painting on a museum wall. These muted timepieces speak loudly.

Just like other pieces of fine jewelry, choosing watches is a matter of personal taste. What's your style? Black on black? Sporty or fun? Casual or dressy? Watches are very popular gifts for special occasions, and we have a distinctive collection of unique ones that we'd like to show you. Tell us about the person you want a memorable gift for and we'll help you choose something quite out of the ordinary. Stop by and see us soon at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. PH: 617-773-3636.

Stephen McGrath Named Program's Director Ethics Law Draws Praise, Criticism From Councillors

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The state's new ethics training mandate drew praise and criticism Monday when city councillors assessed local progress on the decree enacted last July.

Councillors, also, voted unanimously to appoint Human Resources Director Stephen McGrath as director of the city's program.

"What looked like a book-keeping nightmare is actually going quite well," reported City Clerk Joseph Shea, adding later, "People were more ready for this than I anticipated."

Shea described the program which requires all public employees and certain volunteers to review ethics laws and pass a 30-minute test, via computer, on their understanding of state laws related to finance, financial disclosure, ethics and lobbying.

If they don't pass the test, they keep taking the test until they understand all laws related to ethics standards, according to the law. In the future, all new hires must pass the test before starting work.

"You won't be hired without taking the test," said Shea.

"I don't think it's an undue burden," said Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi who opposed a council motion to extend the April deadline for the city to comply with the new law.

During that discussion, Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro submitted a three-pronged resolution related to the ethics law.

Gutro's resolution asked the state to revise the law to cover more municipal situation, rather than state employee circumstances. In addition, the resolution addressed the costs of implementing the law and sought an extension of the April deadline.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee opposed the ethics law, stating such laws emanate from focus groups and hamstring government agencies.

In addition, McNamee charged that administering such laws tax limited resources and workers "stray away from their core mission."

Councillor Joseph Finn also opposed the legislation citing the costs and stating that "ethics can not be legislated...."

Council President Kevin Coughlin voted for the resolution but called it "an unfunded mandate. If you're going to do this, you've got to do it right."

"We believe there's value in ethics training," said Gutro, noting that the current law is "not written for municipal employees" and noting the Massachusetts Municipal Association would "like it to be tweaked so it educates our (employees)."

The voted failed 7-2 with Gutro and Coughlin supporting the measure.

Bates Parcel In Faxon Park Plan

Mayor Thomas Koch and Ward 2 Councilor Daniel Raymondi announced Tuesday that a long-term master plan for Faxon Park received a boost with the acquisition of a 2.5-acre piece of land adjacent to the park through the community Preservation Act known as the "Bates Parcel."

The Community Preservation Act Committee voted recently to purchase the property after city officials negotiated a $50,000 sale price for the land. The land is part of a Master Plan developed by the Koch Administration working with Raymondi and a group of Faxon Park neighbors, and acquiring the land is a substantial step forward, officials said.

"We are gradually moving forward on this long-term plan to protect and expand what is a true jewel of Quincy parks, and acquiring this property is a major positive step forward," Raymondi said.

"I look forward to continue working closely with Mayor Koch, his team, and the residents of the community to preserve the future of Faxon Park."

Where Will Local Republicans Go From Here?

Seems some political doors may have closed for local Democrats ... but have others opened for Quincy Republicans?

No question the electorate – and more specifically the state's unenrolled or independent voters – sent a wake-up call to the White House with the election of Republican Scott Brown over Democrat Martha Coakley and Libertarian candidate Joseph L. Kennedy last Tuesday. Polls seem to indicate Brown's message of lower taxes and stopping President Obama's proposal for healthcare reform resonated with voters. Or they simply are fed up "politics as usual" and took out their discontent with the Democratic party in power.

But one of the questions political pundits are pondering: will voters try to send a similar message to the State House this fall? And more specifically, will the GOP try to parlay Brown's historic Senate victory by putting Republican candidates up against local Democratic incumbent legislators?

Strange how politics can work.

Just a few weeks ago, Coakley – the state's attorney general – was seen as a virtual lock in the race to succeed the late Ted Kennedy and fill his unexpired term that is up in 2012. And if Coakley had won, there would have been some seats opening up. Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating would have run for attorney general; Sen. Michael Morrissey would have run for Norfolk County D.A.; and Rep. Stephen Tobin would have run for Morrissey's Senate seat.

And of course other candidates were bound to campaign for those open seats as well.

Coakley – in one published report – stated she will run for re-election as attorney general next fall. That would likely put an end to Keating's plan to run for attorney general and so Morrissey and Tobin would seek re-election as well.

Thus, it could be pretty quiet in terms of legislative races next fall.

Or will it?

The chairman of the city's Republican City Committee says GOP candidates are being recruited to run against local legislators this fall.

LOGUE

"Since Scott Brown's historic win, we've received calls and e-mails from numerous Quincy residents who want to get involved and help elect more legislators who are committed to reducing government spending and cutting taxes to help create jobs and get our economy moving again," said Quincy GOP Chairman Jennifer Logue.

"We plan to build on the momentum and enthusiasm generated by Scott's election by recruiting Republican candidates to run for state representative and state senator in November."

One local legislator who may face Republican opposition is Sen. Michael Morrissey. The Democrat would be seeking his 10th term as a state senator this fall. He also served as a state representative from 1977 until winning the senate seat in 1992.

Morrissey – the longest continuous serving legislator on Beacon Hill – said he has a strong record as an independent thinker and decision maker. "I don't just go along to get along. If I have something to say, I say it."

He points out he went against his own party and did not support legislation to give the governor the authority to appoint an interim senator after Kennedy's death. The legislation was backed by the state's all-Democratic Congressional delegation and Gov. Deval Patrick who pushed for the appointment.

Morrissey said Brown appealed to independent voters and ran a "nice campaign."

"But I've shown my own willingness to be independent and to take different stands (from the party) to get things done. I will stand on my own actions and merits which is consistent with what voters want."

As far as having an opponent in the fall, Morrissey had this to say. "It shouldn't be a party decision. It should be based on whether their candidate can do a better job. And I think I've done a pretty good job as a legislator."

A lot of things can happen from now until the September primaries and November's final election. And voter sentiment can shift pretty quickly. The Brown-Coakley race is Exhibit A.

Wondering if Exhibit B, C and perhaps D is out there, too.

AS QUINCY GOES, so goes the state?

Long considered a Democratic stronghold, Quincy is earning a reputation as a "bellwether" municipality in state elections.

The Brown campaign noted last week that once they got the election results from Quincy – where Brown beat Coakley 53-45 percent – they knew they had won the election.

Brown's victory here was the first for a Republican statewide candidate in 12 years.

The last GOP candidate to capture Quincy in a state election: former Gov. Paul Cellucci and Lt. Gov. Jane Swift who defeated Democrats Scott Harshbarger and Warren Tolman in the 1998 governor's race. Turnout was 56 percent. Cellucci-Swift carried Quincy in their state-wide victory, polling 14,802 votes here to 13,110 for Harshbarger-Tolman.

But there is recent state election when a Republican didn't win the city but won the state.

That was the 2002 governor's race. The GOP ticket lost by just one vote here.

Republicans Mitt Romney and Kerry Healy won statewide but in Quincy they lost to Democrats Shannon O'Brien and Chris Gabrieli. The final vote: 14,657 for O'Brien/Gabrieli – 14,656 votes for Romney-Healy. Turnout that year was 58 percent in Quincy.

HERE'S A CLOSER look at Brown's victory in Quincy. He won 20 out of 30 precincts enroute to sweeping the city's six wards. The biggest margin of victory (percentage wise) by ward was in Ward 4 where Brown defeated Coakley 56.14 percent to 42.83 percent. The closest margin: Ward 5 where Brown polled 51.11 percent of the vote to Coakley's 47.85 percent. The other ward margins: Ward 1 - Brown 54.49 percent, Coakley 44.23 percent; Ward 2: Brown 52.28 percent, Coakley 46.19 percent; Ward 3: Brown 51.30 percent, Coakley 47.53 percent; Ward 6: Brown 54.42 percent, Coakley 44.42 percent.

City-wide turnout was 52.43 percent in last Tuesday's special state election for U.S. Senate. Some 12 precincts scored higher turnouts than the city average. In those 12 precincts, Brown won 10 and Coakley 2.

Topping the turnout was Ward 6 Precinct 5 with 71.19 percent. That's 1,520 voters out of 2,135 in that part of the city casting ballots. Brown won there with 916 votes to Coakley's 579 (or 60.62 percent to 38.32 percent.)

Other precincts with higher turnout than the city average (and how Brown-Coakley fared):

Ward 1 Precinct 1: 66.20 percent turnout. Brown 57.41 percent, Coakley 41.58 percent.

Ward 3 Precinct 4: 65.37 percent. Brown 57.74 percent, Coakley 41.21 percent.

Ward 1 Precinct 5: 64.40 percent. Brown 55.82 percent, Coakley 42.70 percent.

Ward 1 Precinct 4: 64.18 percent. Brown 58.79 percent, Coakley 40.10 percent.

Ward 5 Precinct 4: 59.44 percent. Brown 54.47 percent, Coakley 42.69 percent.

Ward 5 Precinct 5: 56.84 percent. Brown 57.16 percent, Coakley 41.88 percent.

MORRISSEY

Ward 3 Precinct 2: 56.53 percent. Coakley 50.80 percent, Brown 48.40 percent.

Ward 6 Precinct 3: 54.99 percent. Brown 54.96 percent, Coakley 44.34 percent.

Ward 4 Precinct 3: 54.44 percent. Brown 61.31 percent, Coakley 37.96 percent.

Ward 4 Precinct 2: 54.25 percent. Brown 58 percent, Coakley 40.93 percent.

Ward 5 Precinct 1: 52.97 percent. Coakley 52.18 percent, Brown 46.70 percent.

The lowest turnout in the city: Ward 4 Precinct 4 with 40.33 percent. Brown won there 51.83 percent to Coakley's 46.90 percent.

A RECEPTION in honor of two-term State Treasurer and former City Councillor Tim Cahill, an independent candidate for governor this fall, will be held Friday, Jan. 29 from 7:30 to 10 p.m. at the Alumni Cafe, Hancock Street, Wollaston. Suggested donation is $100, $250 and $500. For more information, contact Kristin Grazioso at the Tim Cahill Committee, 617-479-0367 or email Kristin@Timfor-Governor.com.

ANNE MAHONEY, vice chairwoman of the Quincy School Committee, will have a reception in her honor Thursday, Feb. 4 from 6 to 9 p.m. at The Common Market, 97 Willard St., West Quincy. Suggested donation is $50.

KARL ROOS, who finished fourth in a six-way race for School Committee last fall after coming up short in a recent to third-place winner Barbara Isola, will host a Recount Recovery Party tonight (Thursday) from 6 to 10 p.m. at the Commonwealth Restaurant, 79 Parkway. Karl says his committee is holding the party to celebrate the efforts of the previous campaign and help retire the debt incurred from the recount. Tickets are available at the door for a suggested donation of $10. All are welcome.

Scenes From Yesterday

City Hospital, QUINCY, Mass.

THIS OLD POSTCARD mailed 100 years ago in June 1910 is a view of Quincy's City Hospital showing its original two wooden buildings on Whitwell Street. Opened in 1890 as a private cottage hospital with 25 beds these buildings with a three-acre parcel of land were a gift to the hospital corporation from William Ball Rice. Rice was an owner of the Rice & Hutchins boot and show manufacturing company on Summer Street in Boston. His family's generosity continued when his house on Adams Street later became the first building of the Rice Eventide Nursing Home. The City Hospital was for the most part equipped and maintained by a group of benefactors for almost 30 years until the City took it over in 1919. The benefactors, in addition to Rice, included many of Quincy's prominent families who lived in the Adams Street neighborhood. And later, in 1939, the trustees of the original corporation purchased the adjoining four-acre Sears family property and gave it to the City exclusively for the hospital's expansion. This postcard view is from the northwest coming up Hospital Hill from Adams Street. The porch on the building on the right faced Whitwell Street. Note the two automobiles behind the street. This week's postcard also marks the beginning of the 17th year of this feature. The nostalgic pictorial feature debuted Jan. 27, 1994. The Sun again would like to thank City Historian Tom Galvin for sharing his postcard collection with Sun readers. It remains one of the most popular features in this newspaper. Seeks Information On Sgt. Boston Corbett

Can any readers or subscribers of The Quincy Sun provide me any biographical information on the quizzical life of Sgt. Boston Corbett, the man who shot John Wilkes Booth, President Abraham Lincoln's assassin, in Port Conway, Virginia on April 26, 1865?

I am seeking all available literature (references, citations, journal articles, etc.) on Sgt. Boston Corbett's 1800s existence.

A silver trove, attributed to Corbett and discovered in Boston's South Cove, has generated great local interest in Corbett's background and involvement in Booth's death.

$6 Million Complex

By FRANK MCCAULEY

A large electronics research and development laboratory complex, costing an estimated $5 to $6 million will be built in the Echo Lake area of Quincy Point.

Hazeltine Corporation of Little Neck, New York informed Mayor James R. McIntyre it has acquired the necessary land and will proceed with plans to construct an eventual 210,000-square foot facility.

The company is a developer and manufacturer of highly sophisticated electronics equipment, much of it for the government.

The new laboratory, when completed in three stages, will consolidate the company's Massachusetts facilities now in Braintree and Avon.

An estimated 800 persons, mostly highly skilled engineers and researchers will eventually be employed here representing a multi-million dollar annual payroll.

Hazeltine's decision to locate in Quincy was hailed by Mayor McIntyre and other elected officials.

SINGLE-FAMILY HOME IMAGE IS VANISHING

Quincy is losing its longtime image as a community of single-family homes. City Building Inspector Allan F. MacDonald noted this in his 1969 budget request submitted to Mayor James R. McIntyre.

Comparing new construction in Quincy since 1956 MacDonald observed:

"It is readily evident that the single-family house is being phased out. With it goes the relatively easier methods of wood frame construction and in its place will be the multi-unit dwelling (medium or high-rise) business and industrial structures."

MacDonald referred to the situation as an irreversible trend-in fact, not a trend but a positive position.

FIFTH GRADERS at St. Ann School – sporting their St. Jude Math-a-thon t-Shirts – raised $2,000 of the total $4,000 for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital.

Math-A-Thon At Saint Ann School Raises $4,000 For St. Jude Children's Hospital

Students at St. Ann School were excited to take part in the St. Jude Children's Research Hospital MATH-A-THON program.

MATH-A-THON is an educational program that teaches children the importance of math while helping others in need. Their participation makes it possible to treat patients at St. Jude Children's Research Hospital regardless of a family's ability to pay.

Students in grades 1 through 8 asked family and friends to sponsor them in the program. During a two week period they completed math problems. All work was done at home. The children chose to forgo some of their favorite activities such as watching TV or playing video games.

When asked about giving up free time fifth graders Molly Devin and David Barry stated that they think about the children they are helping and that makes them happy.

Classmate Jaclyn McEachern who gave up ice skating sessions said, "My sister has cancer and I know how hard it is for kids that have that disease. You get joy from helping to find a cure."

All the Saint Ann students worked hard and raised over $4000. They are proud that they were able to make a difference in the lives of children suffering from cancer and other serious childhood diseases.

Principal, Sister Catherine Lee, congratulated the students for their outstanding effort.

'Chili Lovers Chili Cook-off' Saturday At Houghs Neck Church

The First Annual Chili Lovers Chili Cook-Off will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday January 30 at Hough's Neck Congregational Church, 310 Manet Ave., Quincy.

With categories for both home-made and restaurant chilis, the cook-off will offer attendees the chance to sample and savor nearly two dozen different chili recipes, with prizes awarded to the champion chili winners as voted on by attendees.

Restaurants and caterers participating in the chili cook-off include the Stadium Sports Bar and Grill, La Paloma, The Four's, Rock Island Food Company, Braminy Kyte Catering and more.

In addition to chili, the event will feature hot dogs, snacks, soda, and a cash bar serving beer and wine. Baked goods will be available for sale, as will pre-packaged containers of home-made chili for attendees to take home with them. Children's storyteller Big Joe will also provide entertainment.

Admission to the Chili Cook-Off is $5; there is no fee for those wishing to enter chili in the cook-off.

Kelly Park Re-Landscaping Topic For Houghs Neck Garden Club Feb. 3

The re-landscaping of Leo Kelly Park will be the program for the Houghs Neck Garden Club Feb. 3.

A slide show will feature the long, complicated, but richly rewarded process of obtaining a $10,000 Community Preservation Fund grant, and finding the best plants for the park.

Also trying to find rocks

to construct an earthen berm, and coordinating the efforts of people with many different areas of expertise, helped by the Houghs Neck community.

The fire station crew has offered temporary storage for the plants, and also has allowed the garden club to use their water.

The Sean Farrell Construction Company and the Department of Public Works donated and delivered rocks, and boy scouts dug the holes for the project.

The program will be held at 7 p.m. in the second floor community room at Nut Island. Visitors are welcome, and refreshments will be served.

For more information, call 617-481-2111.

Valentine Princess Tea Party Feb. 13

A special Valentine Princess Tea will be held Saturday, Feb. 13 from 10 a.m. to noon and 2 to 4 p.m. at Houghs Neck Congregational Church, 310 Manet Ave., Quincy.

The Valentine's Day celebration will feature fairy tale princesses as well as tea and sweets. There will also be crafts, music and fun activities for children from preschool to Grade 5. (Princess dress and accessories are optional.)

Admission is $10 per child and $5 per adult. Reservations are required; indicate the 10 a.m. or 2 p.m. seating. Call 617-479-2311.

Temple Shalom Film 'If You Make It Possible' Screening Feb. 6

Profiling Israelis and Palestinians who have devoted their lives to achieving non-violence and coexistence in the Middle East, the documentary If You Make It Possible will be the last film of this season's Winter Movie Series at Temple Shalom of Milton. The screening will be on Saturday evening, Feb. 6 at 6:30 p.m.

The public is invited to attend.

If You Make It Possible presents a perspective not seen in television news. The title derives from an aphorism in the Koran: "If you make it possible, it is possible."

Many Israelis who have seen this documentary suggest a companion title drawn from the words of 20th century Zionist Theodore Herzl: "If you will it, it is no dream." Examining the unique lives, viewpoints, and character traits of these Middle Eastern peacemakers, the film is a study of heroism and strength.

The donation for admission in advance or at the door is $3 per person, two for $5. To order tickets in advance or for more infor-

Seeds Topic For Wollaston Garden Club

Members of the Wollaston Garden Club recently hosted an entertaining and informative visual presentation about the world of seeds by Julie McIntosh Shapiro at their regular monthly meeting.

Shapiro, a principal of Garden PHI in Hull, also discussed her work creating digital images of seeds from around the world for the Arnold Arboretum and Herbarium at Harvard University.

Club members and visitors examined samples of seeds including the largest known seed in the world – a coconut that is dispersed by ocean currents until it lodges on a Pacific island, germinates and grows into a palm – and learned about the variety of seeds, their shapes, colors, and features of construction to ensure germination.

Pat Aris, president of the club said, "We now have a deeper appreciation of seeds in everyday life – from our morning cup of coffee to our 'everything bagel.'"

Hostess for the meeting was Susan Lynch and her committee, Jessica Davis-Myers, Marnie Martorano, Maureen Mescheau and Beverly Joyce. Kathy Meade designed the floral arrangement of winter white blooms.

Some of club's programs are free and open to the public. The next community program is called "Urban Forestry" and will be held Thursday, March 18 at 2:30 p.m. at the Wollaston Congregational Church, 48 Winthrop Ave.

The Wollaston Garden Club is a member of the National Garden Club, Inc., and the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, Inc.

For information on the club and their activities visit <http://www.gardencentral.org/clubs/Wollaston/>.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Rita's Pear-Apple Tart

Watching my daughter Rita cook is like watching the food network. I was invited to stay with her and her husband Jonathan on a recent snowy weekend to watch the Patriots.

During that time she cooked meatballs and sauce, pizza, focaccia bread, and a pear tart, which is today's recipe.

The recipe for the tart called for four pears, but Rita used three pears and one apple. After tasting the tart, I think making that instead of two-crust pie is so much easier. And a lot of us don't eat all the crust anyway.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees.

PEAR, APPLE TART

3 pears (any kind will do)
1 apple
2 tablespoons flour
1-teaspoon salt
½ to ¾ cup sugar (depending on the sweetness of the fruit)
1-teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon nutmeg

2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 pie crust (Rita made homemade)
1 cookie sheet
1 sheet parchment paper
1 egg for egg wash

Pear the pears and apple, and slice. In a bowl, add the fruit, salt, lemon juice, flour, cinnamon, nutmeg and sugar. Mix until well blended.

On a cookie sheet, lay the parchment paper. Place the piecrust in the center of the cookie sheet. Add the fruit mixture in the center layering the slices evenly. Now fold over the crust all around the fruit. Beat the egg, and brush the edges.

Bake in a 425-degree oven for 15 minutes and then 350 degrees for about an hour. Serve with whipped cream or ice cream.

Their daughters Emilia and Haley brought in some friends and before you know it most of the food disappeared.

P.S. I recently made the tart with just the apples, and it was equally delicious.

Homes For Our Troops Fundraiser Saturday

Homes For our Troops will host a community fundraiser Saturday, Jan. 30 from 7 p.m. to midnight at Florian Hall in Dorchester.

Tickets for the event are $15 and can be purchased at the door.

Homes for Our Troops is a national non-profit, non-partisan 501(c)(3) organization founded in 2004. They are strongly committed to helping those who have selflessly given to our country and have returned home with serious disabilities and injuries since Sept. 11, 2001.

Homes for Our Troops assists severely injured Servicemen and Servicewomen and their immediate families by raising donations of money, building materials and professional labor and to coordinate the process of building a home that provides maximum freedom of movement and the ability to live more independently.

All proceeds from this event go directly to Homes for Our Troops. Donations are tax-deductible.

The event will feature the music of "Dukes of Disco" DJ Dru Errico. There were also be silent auction and raffle prizes including a large screen TV, box seats to a Red Sox Yankees game and gift cards to several local restaurants

For more information, to make an in-kind donation for the raffle or silent auction, or to request sponsorship information, contact: Christine McGuigan, 617-335-3285, or Jeanine McInnis, 617 875-4280, or Dan McInnis 617 875-4270.

Ward 2 Democrats To Caucus Feb. 13

Registered Democrats in Ward 2 will hold a caucus at the Fore River Clubhouse, 16 Nevada Rd. on Saturday, Feb. 13 at 10 a.m. to elect 10 delegates and three alternates to the 2010 Massachusetts Democratic Convention, according to Ward 2 Chairman Brad Croall.

All registered Democrats in Ward 2 are invited to attend.

The statewide Convention will be held Friday,

June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center, Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will meet to endorse statewide candidates.

All ballots will be written and secret. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women. Those not elected, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority or disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited.

Challenges to the process must be filed within 10 days of the caucus date with the Mass. Democratic party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, 02120.

For more information, contact Croall at 617-930-0106.

Ward 4 Democrats To Caucus Feb. 18

Ward 4 Democrats will open their annual caucus Thursday, Feb. 18, at 7 p.m. at the Ward 4 Community Center, 100 Brooks Av., according to Thomas Fabrizio, Ward Chairman.

The caucus, open to all registered Democrats in Ward 4, will elect nine delegates and three alternates for the 2010 convention.

All ballots will be written and secret. The ward's eight delegates and two alternates will be equally divided between men and women. The ninth delegate and third alternate delegate will be either a man or woman in accordance with Democratic Party rules.

All Democrats, 18-years old or older and registered in Ward 4 as of Dec. 31, 2009, are welcome to attend and run for a delegate or alternate position.

Those not elected, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority or disabled.

Delegates will represent Ward 4 at the 2010 Democratic Convention planned for the first weekend in June at the DCU Center, Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited.

Challenges to the process must be filed within 10 days of the caucus date with the Mass. Democratic party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, 02120.

For more information, contact Fabrizio at 617-479-0037 or the Democratic State Committee, 617-776-2676.

Planners Recommend More Low-Cost Units; Housing Committee Review Begins Feb. 16

City Meets State's Goals For Affordable Housing

By LAURA GRIFFIN

More than 10 percent of the city's housing units meet the state's standards for affordable housing, according to a report prepared by the Planning Department and submitted to City Council Monday.

That 10.3 percentage puts the city in exclusive company across the Commonwealth as only 33 of the state's 351 communities have attained the state's affordable housing goal, according to state statistics.

Many communities are far behind, according to the numbers.

"Currently, about 230 communities are at levels of less than 5%," according to the report which, also, outlines statewide opposition to the state's mandates under Chapter 40B or the so-called "anti-snob legislation" which has been in effect since 1969.

The Chapter 40B legislation allows developers to bypass local zoning laws in cities or towns that do not meet the 10% standard. For the past 40 years, that legislation fostered bitter opposition from pricier communities with large tracts of undeveloped land.

According to the report, Quincy has 4,093 qualified affordable housing units out of a total 39,912.

That does not include units rented under federal Section 8 subsidies or houses purchased under first-time buyer programs.

Despite the city's success in meeting the state mandates, planners state that, due to the economic free-fall and other changes, "The need for new decent affordable housing for all could not be clearer."

For example, planners believe the 2010 U.S. Census figures could cause the City "to slip below the 10% threshold for a period of time until new affordable units come on line...."

Increasing such numbers could be difficult in a city that has reached a 99% build-out of residentially zoned land, according to the report which concludes, "The City needs to implement affordable housing strategies that promote compact development."

"New multi-family developments will maximize the number of units that can be built on the last available land," according to the report.

And planners note that developers won't lose out, as "multi-family developments should return a profit to those developers willing to take on the risks of redeveloping existing properties that may carry significant site preparation costs."

The details and statistics cited are part of the "Housing Production Plan for Affordable Housing, 2010-2014" prepared by the planning department and, unanimously, approved Jan. 13 by the Planning Board.

Thumbnail Sketch

The plan's three dozen pages, also, provide a thumbnail sketch of some of the changes in the city over the past decade. However, the report cites statistics from 2007, months before the economic crisis of 2008.

Some examples of the report's overview of the city follow:

While the minority population accounted for 8.8% of the city's residents in 1990, that has increased to a current 27.5% total.

The largest increase is reflected in the growth of those of Asian background. In 1990, that total was 5,432 and in 2007, that total was 16,823. Other minority populations, also, increased during those years.

While cultural and educational backgrounds changed, so, too, did the age of Quincy's residents which "reflect the general population trends of the area."

The percentage of children under age 5 has decreased by 26% in the 17 years while the largest increase was in the 35-64 age range.

In addition, the total number of residents, both under 18 and over 65 have decreased by over 11% from 1990 to 2007.

As for employment, the report states that the city "has seen increases in persons employed in the management and professional occupations (38%) as well as in the service sector (24%)."

An explanation of one change states, "The increase in the number of citizens with college degrees is a key factor in the increase in household income and changes to the work for demographics of Quincy..."

Graphs in the report show an increase of over 10,000 persons earning over $75,000 between 1990 to 2007. Just over 4,000 persons earned over $75,000 in 1990 and, in 2007, over 14,000 earned over $75,000.

Information from the city's Assessors indicate that single family homes make up 34.2% of the total housing units on 56.3 % of the total residential land area.

The report also described an increase in a category described as sub-families, those families doubling up with other family members. "Many people living in subfamilies could be thought of as the 'hidden homeless,' people who without family support could be living on the street."

City Council must now approve the plan and the Council's Housing Committee will begin review on Feb. 16 at 7 p.m.

Church, Community Groups Helping Haiti Earthquake Victims

Quincy Point Church Collecting Items For Hygiene Kits

By JOE REARDON

Lip service alone has already sprung Quincy Point Congregational Church parishioners into donating items for hygiene kits for victims of the devastating earthquake.

The Jan. 12 earthquake registered a 7.0 and was centered near the coast of Port-au-Prince, Haiti. More than 150,000 died and 600,000 have been left homeless as a result of the disaster.

Reverend Ann Suzedell, the church pastor, said the bags of items that have come in already is "a good start" and expects even more in the coming weeks.

"Absolutely," Suzedell said when asked if the parish would step up for the cause. "No doubt about it. It's a way to help that's very hands on. The word went out informally and we've already got donations coming in."

The Church World Service, an International aid organization, has issued an urgent request for hygiene kits for Haiti. Items needed for each kid include: One hand towel measuring approximately 16"x28" (no fingertip or bath towels); one washcloth; one wide-tooth comb; one nail clipper (no metal files or emery board); one bar of soap (bar size in wrapper); one toothbrush (in original packaging); six band aids.

The congregation went through Church World Service during its Tsunami relief work. Suzedell said the organization is very well respected. "We work through Church World Service," she said. "They know exactly what is needed. People want to make sure their help is going to the right place."

Suzedell has a specific goal in mind for helping the Haitian people. "I would hope we could send 100 (kits)," she said. "We're glad to get any items. You don't need to assemble a whole kit."

Any of these items may be brought to the Quincy Point Congregational Church, 444 Washington St. (corner of Washington and Southern Artery) or brought to the Mardi Gras Celebration at the church Feb. 12 at 6 p.m. Deadline for the collection is Feb. 12. The church office is open 9-2 Mon-Fri.

Church World Service reports they are providing emergency supplies through local partners in Haiti, and are working on temporary shelter, food and health assistance. Staff on the ground continues to expedite emergency aid to those in need, while also turning attention to vulnerable children and people with disabilities.

Quincy Rotary Seeks Donations For Shelter Box Relief For Haiti

The Quincy Rotary Club is purchasing five Shelter Boxes as an initial response to the devastation in Haiti.

The Interact Clubs of Quincy and North Quincy High Schools have donated approximately $750 which will be supplemented by a Rotarian to purchase a sixth box.

Shelter Box responds instantly to disasters all around the world delivering aid as quickly as possible to people in the most need. The immediate need seems to be providing some shelter to the thousands of people living in the streets.

The Shelter Box project - which is a cooperative effort between a Rotary in Florida and a Rotary Club in the United Kingdom - has shipped thousands of these boxes to Haiti already.

Each box is $1,000 to purchase and provides a tent to house up to 10 people with bedding, cooking utensils and other needed survival components.

At this time, food and water are being shipped in by several organizations but Quincy Rotarians said the Shelter Boxes would provide a more significant need to individuals suffering in Haiti.

The Quincy Rotary Club is reaching out to the local community for help and to join in the efforts to purchase and donate more Shelter Boxes. The combined giving of business and individual residents of Quincy would enable the Club to help many more individuals.

Send donations to The Rotary Club of Quincy, P.O. Box 692178, Quincy, MA 02269. Note on the envelope: Rotary Haiti Relief Fund.

Union Congregational Church Raises $800 For Sisters Of St. Margaret

This past Sunday, during its 10 a.m. worship service, Union Congregational Church, 136 Rawson Rd., Wollaston, took up a special collection of money for the Sisters of St. Margaret, an Episcopal Religious Order of Women who have served the people of Haiti since 1927.

Over the years, the Sisters have founded and run a music school, a school for handicapped children, a home for elderly indigent women and a more.

In the earthquake, the Sisters lost everything: their church, convent, the home, the schools, all their possessions, but they survived. They have been living in a stadium with 1,000 other people with a little rice and a little water.

Two Sisters of St. Margaret spoke to the congregation and explained their ministry and needs in Haiti. The congregation raised more than $800 in their collection and that number was doubled by the Benevolence Committee, for a total of over $1,600 plus a large donation of medical supplies for the people of Haiti.

Residents who would like to make a donation to support the people of Haiti can send checks made payable to "The Society of St. Margaret" and sent to St. Margaret's Convent, 17 Highland Park St., Boston, MA 02119-1436.

Registration For Kindergarten Set For March 2 At Local Schools

Registration for full-day kindergarten classes and the half-day kindergarten option in Quincy Public Schools for Sept. 2010 will be held Tues., March 2 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. local elementary schools.

Children must be 5 years old on or before Aug. 31 to register for next fall's classes. The following five documents must be produced in order to register the child:

The child's birth certificate with a raised seal

Proof of residency, such as any two tax bills, utility bills, copy of a lease

Copy of physician's examination report filed within one year

Written records of immunization.

Parents seeking open enrollment must first register at their home school on March 2. The child need not come to the registration.

All questions regarding the kindergarten program should be directed to the local school principal.

Film Series To Screen 'Up' Saturday

United First Parish Church, 1306 Hancock St., Quincy Center, will show the film "Up" as part of its intergenerational film series

Saturday, Jan. 30.

Doors open at 6 p.m., the film will start at 6:30 p.m. and ends at 8 p.m.

In the movie, an elderly man and a young boy journey to the wilderness of South America in a house with thousands of balloons carrying it.

Those attending the film may bring a snack; beverages will be provided. Children are invited to wear pajamas if they like.

Pre-Kindergarten Screenings Planned April 13, April 27

Parents and guardians of pre-school children interested in the Quincy Public Schools Integrated Pre-Kindergarten programs may set up screening appointments now for the 2010-year.

Individual appointments will be scheduled Tuesday, April 13, and Tuesday, April 27.

The pre-school programs serve three and four-year-old children with special needs and their typically developing peers in the city's three Title 1 districts.

A citywide tuition-based program is also available for qualified students from non-Title I districts.

Half-day sessions are held Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays.

Three local elementary school districts qualify for Title I program. The eligible districts are Snug Harbor Elementary School, Clifford Marshall Elementary School, and the Della Chiesa Early Childhood Center.

The program for Clifford Marshall students is held at the Snug Harbor Elementary School.

Children who live in non-Title I districts in the city are eligible for the citywide Integrated Pre-Kindergarten Program. There is a tuition fee for this program which is held at the Snug Harbor Elementary School. Appointments may be scheduled by calling 617-984-8951.

In conjunction with the program and consistent with the Special Education Act, Quincy Public Schools conducts a screening of three and four-year old children in order to identify those who have special needs.

Appointments for the screenings for students in the district covering the Della Chiesa Early Childhood Center may be scheduled by calling 617-984-8777.

All other appointments, including special needs screenings, will be scheduled through the Snug Harbor School by calling 617-984-8951.

FUNGAL FIGHTER

Toenail fungus afflicts about 40 percent of the population. This fungus is often contracted from one's surroundings. Athletics and people who wear tight-fitting shoes are at higher risk for toenail fungus. Anti-fungal medications are not always effective and may have some uncomfortable side effects. A patented foot laser is now an option for those who want to rid their toenails of the nasty fungus. A beam passes through the toenail to reduce the infection in the nail bed. This revolutionary laser procedure, which takes less than an hour, is performed on an outpatient basis and does not require anesthesia. It eliminates the toenail fungus in over 80 percent of the cases. This is an especially effective and painless procedure.

Fungal nails can be persistent. They don't disappear on their own, sometimes resist cure, and may become re-infected. Seek professional treatment if this problem plagues you every step. Because your comfort during treatment is our utmost concern, our skilled professional staff works as a team to make your visits pleasant as well as productive. For an appointment for a consultation regarding your particular foot care concern, call 781-986-3668. You'll find high-tech care with old-fashioned service at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. I am affiliated with the Brockton and Good Samaritan Hospitals.

HINT: Currently, insurance does not cover laser fungal treatments.

MORE FOR YOU HERE AT HOME

Comfort Keepers®

When seniors need help to stay in their homes, more people in the Quincy area are turning to Comfort Keepers®. Mary Jo Cicchetti and her son Greg Cicchetti are the owners of the local Comfort Keepers®. Mary Jo's lifetime experience with the elderly, especially with her own mother, coupled with her son's desire to start a business of his own led to their collaboration.

Fully licensed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and adhering to all of the required industry standards, this mother and son team is dedicated to helping seniors live happy, healthy lives in the comfort of their homes by providing quality, compassionate care. The in-home care services provided enrich their client's lives and help them maintain the highest possible level of independent living.

Families choose Comfort Keepers® for many different reasons. For some, only 4 hours a week is needed to do laundry, light housekeeping or prepare meals. For others it is taking people to doctor appointments and grocery shopping. Additionally, Comfort Keepers® can provide a much needed break or "respite care" for family members who are the regular care givers for their loved one.

"I meet with families to determine what services they need and select caregivers based on those needs" said Mary Jo. Comfort Keepers® also has Safety Choice technology including personal safety machines, medication-reminder devices that safely dispense meds and warning devices to keep people with Alzheimer's safely at home.

Although based in Quincy, Comfort Keepers® provides services for Milton, Stoughton, Randolph, Holbrook, Brockton, Dorchester and many neighboring Boston areas. For more information about Comfort Keepers, call 617-890-1075 or visit quincycomfortkeepers.com. "Our greatly improved website is the source of excellent information," said Greg.

There are more than 550 Comfort Keepers® located throughout the country and internationally. Each office is independently owned and operated.

On Thursday, Jan. 14, at approximately 8:40 p.m., Officer Dan Parisi was on patrol in the area of the CVS store on Independence Avenue when he observed a male wearing a grey hoodie running from the store to the rear of the Varsity Club parking lot.

The Officer noted that the CVS parking lot was empty and all the lights were on inside the store. Concerned that a crime may have occurred, the Officer entered the store and met with employees who said that there was no problem in the store, however, there was a male wearing a grey hoodie who was acting strange to the point where they had conducted surveillance on him.

The employees said the male inquired about buying a knife and after being told that CVS didn't sell them, the male purchased a box cutter, along with mouthwash and some plastic baggies.

Officer Parisi drove behind the Varsity Club and located the male sitting in a pick up truck. When the Officer illuminated the truck, he observed a male make a sudden movement and disappear from sight. The Officer requested back up as he approached the vehicle. Officer Parisi asked the occupant what he was doing and he said he was just sitting in his car.

When asked why he just bought a box cutter from CVS, the male said, "I haven't done anything wrong", then paused and said, "I usually have a weapon on me." While talking to the male, the Officer noted that he was making rapid eye movements to the floor of the truck, so, concerned for his safety, the Officer told the male to exit the vehicle, where he conducted a pat frisk for weapons.

Officer Parisi looked inside the vehicle and saw a box of sandwich bags, which are often used for the packaging of illegal narcotics. The Officer also knew that once the narcotics are inside the bag, a knot is tied and a knife, box cutter or other sharp instrument is used to cut off the excess bag. Officer Jim Whedbee arrived on scene. When Officer Parisi told the male that he was going to search the vehicle, the male blurted out, "I just got out of jail and I don't want to go back." Based on this statement and that the male just purchased a box cutter, the male was handcuffed for officer safety.

Upon searching the vehicle, Officer Parisi found 1 open box of CVS brand sandwich bags, a box cutter and a jacket with a hard compacted piece of a white powder substance and 4 1/4 blue pills. The Officer recognized this as cocaine broken off from a kilo and Oxycodone pills. The male, a 27 year old homeless man, was informed he was under arrest for "Possession of Class B Drug with Intent to Distribute" and he responded by screaming, "F$%^, F$%^, F$%^" as he banged his head off the cruiser window.

Nice Work!

ANOTHER JOB WELL DONE: On Wednesday, Jan. 13, at approximately 4:25 p.m., Officer William Lanergan was on his way home in his own vehicle after working a day shift. He was on Southern Artery heading towards Furnace Brook Parkway when he observed another vehicle ahead of him having difficulty staying in its own lane and at one point almost struck the Officer's vehicle as he turned left onto Furnace Brook Parkway. The vehicle, now behind the Officer, closed in and drove very close to the bumper of the Officer's vehicle.

The Officer thought that this may be an act of road rage as he monitored the vehicle. Both vehicles came to a stop at the lights at Hancock Street and when the light turned green, the suspect vehicle accelerated very quickly and passed the Officer's vehicle on the wrong side of the road over the double yellow lines, forcing traffic coming from the opposite direction to stop.

At that time, Officer Lanergan notified Dispatch over the radio that he needed a cruiser to stop an erratic operator on Furnace Brook. The Officer was advised that there were no cruisers in the immediate area but that were headed in that direction. Officer Lanergan stated he would continue to monitor the vehicle and follow up the investigation on his next shift if the vehicle couldn't be stopped. The suspect vehicle continued westerly on Furnace Brook over the speed limit and would then quickly hit his brakes in an apparent attempt to have the Officer crash into him.

The suspect vehicle accelerated very quickly and turned onto Jenness Street, again cutting off traffic. Now fearing the driver was possibly impaired, Officer Lanergan updated Dispatch on his location. The suspect vehicle sped up on Jenness Street to approximately 50-55 M.P.H. in a thickly settled area. The driver's actions were a clear danger at this point to pedestrians and drivers in the area. The Officer saw the vehicle stopped at the red light at Common Street and Quarry Street, so he notified Dispatch that he was going to approach the operator.

Officer Lanergan, in full uniform, went to the driver's window and said, "Quincy Police - pull over now." The driver did not pull over. He kept checking for the light to turn green and when told to produce his license, the driver said, "No - F$%^ off", then accelerated very quickly, turning right on Quarry Street. Officer Lanergan updated Dispatch that the driver was wanted for failure to stop for a Police Officer.

Officer Barry DeFranco responded to the Quarry Street address that the vehicle listed to and located the vehicle. A man on the rear stairway to his residence yelled out, "Yeah here I am." Officer DeFranco asked why he didn't stop for the uniformed Police Officer and he said, "He cut me off," then said he did not know that Officer Lanergan was a Police Officer. The suspect was placed under arrest for "Failure to Stop for a Police Officer" along with other motor vehicle offenses.

Nice Work!

HEALTH and FITNESS

Chill 'Out' With Safe Outdoor Exercise, TOPS Says

Exercising outdoors in cold weather offers the chance to burn calories in a winter wonderland. Whether the activity is skiing, skating, walking, snow shoeing, or jogging, exercising in the chilly air can be invigorating and help keep one's fitness momentum going all season long.

Amy Goldwater, M.S., educator, former body-building champion, and physical fitness expert for TOPS Club, Inc. (Take Off Pounds Sensibly), the non-profit weight-loss support organization, offers the following tips for exercising safely in cold climates. Exercisers should get a doctor's permission before beginning any fitness program.

Dress in layers. Ironically, many cold-weather exercisers dress too warmly. Exercise generates a considerable amount of heat. For best results, wear layers that can be removed and put back on as needed. Start with a thin layer of synthetic material such as polypropylene, which "wicks" sweat away from the body. For a middle layer, add fleece for insulation. Top with a waterproof, breathable layer. Goldwater says, "A good rule of thumb for cold-weather exercise is to dress for a day 20 degrees warmer; this allows for the heat generated by exercising. Wind makes a cold day feel colder, so knowing the wind chill factor can help exercisers plan what to wear on breezy days."

Protect extremities.

Try wearing a thin pair of gloves under a pair of heavier gloves or mittens lined with wool or fleece. Buying exercise shoes a half-size larger than usual will allow for thick thermal socks or an extra pair of regular socks. Note that the body loses most of its heat through the head and neck, so insulate these areas with a hat or ski band.

Warm up before a workout by walking and stretching; it's well worth the time. In winter weather, muscles tighten and take longer to loosen than they do in warmer temperatures. Goldwater explains that warm muscles burn fat more readily than cold muscles and that muscle elasticity helps prevent injuries. A warm-up also helps improve the function of the nervous system and the heart. Goldwater's guideline: "Warm up and cool down indoors in the winter."

Choose practical exercise gear. If it's dark, wear reflective clothing. Choose footwear with enough traction to prevent falls. Wear a helmet for skiing, snowboarding, and snowmobiling. Protect eyes from snow and ice glare with dark glasses or goggles.

Remember sunscreen.

It's as easy to get sunburned in winter as in summer—even more so if exercising in the snow or at high altitudes. Wear a sunscreen that has an SPF of at least 15. Use a lip balm that contains sunscreen.

Drink plenty of fluids.

Sip water or sports drinks before, during, and after a workout. Exercisers can become just as dehydrated in the cold as in the heat.

Know when to go inside. After generating a good sweat, a body becomes more susceptible to the cold, particularly in windy conditions. When finished exercising in cold weather, get back into a warm environment as soon as possible. Being wet and idle in freezing conditions increases the risk of hypothermia.

Use common sense to be safe. Goldwater recommends, "On very cold days, stay close to shelter, and don't go out alone. Having an exercise buddy is always a good idea for safety—and encouragement!"

Winter: Waistline Wrecker?

Winter weight gain doesn't have to be a fact of life—even with the body's chemical changes that can compel you to binge on carbs and "comfort foods."

"There's quite a bit of science that shows levels of serotonin, which regulates appetite and mood, dip in the winter time," says Dr. J. Adam Rindfleisch, associate professor of family medicine at the University of Wisconsin School of Medicine and Public Health (SMPH).

"When the brain senses a serotonin level drop, it signals a craving for carbohydrates. Carbs can provide a quick burst of serotonin," explains Rindfleisch.

A drop in serotonin levels, in addition to less activity in cold-weather months, can be a recipe for significant weight gain. Two studies published in 2000 show holiday weight gain alone can range from just under a pound to five pounds. And the really bad news is that most of us do not take off those extra pounds. Also, the weight gain appears to be on the higher end of the range for people who are already overweight.

"It is possible to satisfy your cravings for carbs and comfort foods, without weight gain," says Donna Weihsen, clinical nutritionist at University of Wisconsin Hospital and Clinics.

Weihsen points out that not only are we physiologically inclined to pack on pounds in the winter, we're socialized to crave warm, sweet, creamy and hearty foods.

"If it's cold outside, the last thing we want is a salad! We want warm apple pie, pot roast and mashed potatoes and other foods with extra calories," says Weihsen. She says with a little creative thinking, and good recipes, it is possible to satisfy cravings without high-calorie foods (see attached recipes).

"Things like chili and soup with rice or pasta and a fresh roll can be very satisfying and filling. French onion soup with a little cheese sprinkled on top can be as little as 200 calories," says Weihsen.

What about the inevitable sugar cravings?

"You have to have sweets or you'll binge," says Weihsen. Her advice is to pick a few treats every once in awhile and eat them without guilt.

Rindfleisch agrees that the key to cracking the craving conundrum is balance.

"If you make mostly healthy food choices, enjoy an occasional treat and get as much activity as possible, you can survive the winter and maintain your weight," he says.

Fibromyalgia, a Baffling Illness

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My 50-year-old daughter has been diagnosed with fibromyalgia. She is in a great deal of pain, and medications have provided no relief. She has been told there is no cure. Exactly what is fibromyalgia? What causes it?—E.F.

ANSWER: Fibromyalgia is a baffling illness whose two principal symptoms are pain and fatigue. The pain is body-wide, on both sides and above and below the waist. For diagnosis, the pain has to have been present for three or more months. The fatigue of this condition is overwhelming, so much so that the simplest of daily tasks becomes a formidable challenge. Patients also suffer from sleep that does not refresh, and they often find it difficult to concentrate.

Its cause remains a great unknown.

Specific tests for fibromyalgia don't exist. However, tender points—areas on the body where finger pressure elicits pain out of proportion to the pressure applied—aid in making a diagnosis. There are 18 such points, and for a diagnosis, 11 should be present.

Other illnesses—such as rheumatoid arthritis, lupus, Sjogren's syndrome and hepatitis—have similar symptoms—have to be excluded, so testing for those conditions becomes part of the fibromyalgia workup.

Your daughter is right. No cure has been found, but sometimes symptoms improve on their own. Exercise is important. It sounds ridiculous to ask a person who is hurting and exhausted to exercise. At the start, exercise intensity can be modest, just walking. The goal is to extend exercise to 20 or 30 minutes of daily exercise and to pick up the tempo gradually.

The Food and Drug Administration has approved three medicines to ease fibromyalgia symptoms. They are Lyrica, Cymbalta and the newest, Savella.

The booklet on fibromyalgia provides more information on this baffling illness and its treatments. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue—No. 305W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My friend's toenails are white. What causes that?—E.B.

ANSWER: Fungal infections of the nail often turn them white. Proof of fungal infections comes from a doctor examining scrapings of the nails with a microscope.

Many medicines are on the market for treatment of such an infection. Some can be painted on the nail—Penlac is an example. The success rate is not breathtaking. Oral prescription medicines are also available. They are expensive, and they don't always work. Lots of people prefer to live in peace with such nail infections by ignoring them.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My stomach sags around the belly button. My doctor says it's an umbilical hernia. There's no discomfort or pain. Will 100 sit-ups a day fix this?—L.W.

ANSWER: A thousand sit-ups a day will not fix it. Sit-ups could make it worse. Only surgery can fix it. Any exercise that increases pressure within the abdomen can make the hernia protrude more. If this bothers you, get a surgeon's opinion.

for the 21st Century

ADOPTING GOOD HABITS

Even before infants' baby teeth erupt, parents can take steps to ensure their children's oral health. Beginning with using a damp gauze pad to gently wipe baby's gums, parents can remove residual milk, formula, and fruit juices from the mouth. These liquids contain sugars that bacteria feed on and produce acids that attack teeth. For this reason, a baby should not be allowed to sleep with a bottle of juice or formula in this or her mouth. Parents should start brushing their children's teeth with a soft-bristled toothbrush and a pea-sized amount of toothpaste as soon as the first tooth appears. Flossing to prevent cavities between teeth should start when two teeth have erupted next to each other.

February is National Children's Dental Health Month. Primary teeth typically begin to appear when a baby is between age six months and one year. Primary teeth help children chew and speak. This column is brought to you in the interest of better dental health. You can expect us to give you gentle, comforting care using the most up-to-date techniques and equipment. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where our trained professional staff works as a team to make your visits pleasant. Please call 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment. We will always discuss your treatment options with you. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Poor oral health has been associated with the proliferation of untold bacteria that, over a lifetime, can lead to heart disease and stroke.

CHIROPRACTOR AS PERSONAL TRAINER

By now, whether you exercise or not, most people know that engaging in regular physical exercise promotes health and prolongs life. However, taking part in exercise and fitness programs can pose its own set of potential problems. Due to age-related changes in joints, muscles, tendons, and ligaments, and/or lingering effects of previous injuries, many exercisers have impediments that stand in the way of getting all the exercise they want and need. In fact, weaknesses and imbalances may render them more prone to (re)injury. If so, the chiropractor can play an important role in identifying your vulnerable points. We can also teach you to modify your exercise regimens so that future injuries can be avoided.

Administrator Is Pro-Active At Squantum Elementary School

Principal Steve Sylvia Prefers Classrooms To A Desk Job

By JOE REARDON

Steve Sylvia doesn't spend a whole lot of time in his office during the school day. That's not where the action is. It's in the hallways, the classrooms and outside during recess where the wheels of the Squantum School are turning. That's where the 38-year-old principal likes to be - in the middle of the school machine.

And that's not going to change anytime soon.

"I will never be the kind of person who sits here and waits for things to come to me," said the affable Sylvia. "Administering from the desk is not the way the world is any more."

"I don't sit in there (the office) much. I'd rather walk around. That's the best part of my day."

"The culture and climate of the school was very strong. I inherited that. My goal is to keep that going and keep that strong."

He knows that won't happen behind a desk, semi-oblivious to the every day going-ons in the classroom. Sylvia attacks the school day with an enthusiasm that comes only from a person who has a true passion for the job at hand. He's outside in the morning, every morning, the first member of the school staff greeting the children. In the afternoon, Sylvia is back outside, wishing them a good rest of the day. To refer to him as a hands-on principal is a gross understatement.

During recess, he joins in the flag football game. If there's a note complementing a student's work, it's Sylvia who hands it to the student. He wants the children to trust him and be able to come to him if they have a problem.

"The face-to-face service allows me to be pro active," said Sylvia. "To see the students excel, the amount of growth that these children have is amazing."

Last March, the children in the school read over 1,000 books collectively. As part of the program, Sylvia dressed up as a character from a book from the class that read the greatest number. Sylvia wound up dressed as Despereaux, a mouse in the book "The Tale of Despereaux."

Second-grade teacher Kim Tonetti said Sylvia is popular with the kids and teachers alike. "He's wonderful, energetic and really listens to the teachers," Tonetti said. "We adore him. He's great. Steve relates well to the children and staff."

"Steve is the type of principal who maintains a structured environment but treats his staff as professionals, allowing them the freedom to run their classroom. Steve is an effective listener who has the ability to make difficult decisions with integrity and compassion."

"He takes the time to know his staff and students and relates, and interacts well with both. Steve supports us and frequently shows his appreciation with words of encouragement and luncheons. What I like most about Steve is his sense of humor."

Sylvia had as much fun as the kids who were thrilled to see their principal dressed as one of their favorite characters. "They still talk to me about it," he said with a laugh.

Sylvia knew at an early age he wanted a career in education. He attended school in Southeastern Massachusetts and went on to earn his bachelor's degree at Stonehill and masters at UMass-Boston. He's spent his whole education career in Quincy, working as a guidance counselor at Central Middle School for 10 years before taking over as principal at the Squantum School last year.

The guidance counselor position prepared Sylvia for his new job. "As a guidance counselor you're in the classrooms and you meet the parents," he said. "The structure of a middle school is a good trainer."

"It's (principal) a powerful job. It's an important job and not something I take lightly. I love being a principal. I'll do it as long as I'm effective."

As important as Sylvia

knows his job is, it's the teachers he believes who make the machine work. He'd challenge you to find a more talented staff.

"Phenomenal," Sylvia said. "They're amazing. They make the school with the students. It's my job to share what they do and what the students do every day. I let the teachers take chances. I support them. I don't have a mold of the perfect teacher."

Sylvia recounted a story of a student who had been struggling with his reading in class. He improved as the school year went on and was so excited he asked Sylvia if he could read to him. "To see students excel, the amount of growth that these children have is amazing," said Sylvia.

Squantum School is an exciting institution to be learning at this year. There's a brand new computer lab that is utilized by the students. Among other lessons, the kids have followed weather forecasts around the world on the computers.

Veterans from the community, many of them parents of the children, were on hand at the Veteran's Day assembly. The school is working on "Going Green" by teaching the kids about conserving paper and recycling.

There are mock elections and a parade on tap to celebrate the Chinese New Year. Plans are also in the works to help the people in Haiti after the devastating earthquake. The Special Olympics are going to be held at the school on Feb. 12.

"There are lessons that tie in with what's going on in the world," Sylvia explained. "The beyond is the goal. We want them to be life-long learners with a sense of community."

Quincy Schools, Tech Ed Business Educators To Host 'Credit For Life' March 26

Quincy Public Schools Career and Technical Education Educators will host the second annual "Credit for Life" fair Friday, March 26 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Boston Marriott Quincy.

The fair's goal is to provide high school seniors with the ability to be independent adult consumers and have the knowledge of personal finance to survive in today's global economy.

Approximately 250 students from Quincy and North Quincy High School will participate in the fair. Fifteen booths will be displayed throughout the Marriott Ballroom and students will have to spend from a budget based on the future jobs they foresee themselves in.

Students will make decisions on how much money they want to spend on transportation, housing, food, clothing, savings, and several other areas.

The "Credit for Life" Fair is being implemented with the assistance of numerous Quincy School - Community Partners and local business volunteers from across the South Shore. Among them: Quincy Credit Union, South Shore Savings Bank, Eastern Bank, Quincy College, Quirk Auto Dealerships, ING, Quincy Chamber of Commerce, South Coastal Workforce Investment Board, S Bank, Century 21-Abigail Adams, Quincy Rotary Club, South Shore YMCA, Donahue Insurance, Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, Stop & Shop Companies, The Tax Doctor, Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company, HarborOne Credit Union, State Street Corporation, Met Life Insurance, AXA Equitable, and others.

Guests planning to attend the event include Mayor Thomas Koch, Supt. Richard DeCristofaro and Kevin Meskill, vice president of Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Other community leaders are expected to help support students who will learn more about budgeting their money after high school.

Insurance STRATEGIES
by Jim Sullivan
ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?
Car manufacturers are installing advanced computerized systems into vehicles to increase their safety and reliability. These systems also help insurance companies predict potential loss, which helps to establish rates. If you have questions about auto insurance, please call JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY at 617-328-8600 to schedule a consultation. As an independent insurance agency, we have 9 carefully selected auto insurance carriers and can therefore offer you the best coverage at the most competitive price. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.
As any owner of a late-model vehicle knows, computer technology is exerting an ever-increasing influence on the auto industry. In addition, information technology is also having an effect on the way that automobile insurers analyze data and service their customers. To begin with, increased computer power enables insurance companies to assess data about drivers based on their garaging address, which enables them to better predict the potential loss cost for a particular vehicle. In the future, insurance companies hope to employ data generated from vehicles' onboard computers that will help them better streamline their rating systems. From drivers' standpoints, both passive and active systems in vehicles and roads are likely to make automobile travel safer, thereby reducing insurance costs.
NOTE: Crash-avoidance systems currently used by some automobile manufacturers are just one example of advanced technology improving vehicle safety.

Two Local Legislators See No 'Red Flags' In Brown Senate Win

Republican Scott Brown defeated Democrat Martha Coakley by a margin of 53% to 46% in Quincy but the upset apparently failed to raise the red warning flag among the city's legislative delegation -- Democrats all.

"Obviously it came as a surprise to everyone," said Rep. Ron Mariano. "We all should take notice. A lot of the issues involved health care. This being a referendum on health care, I'd like to wait and see."

"It gives us cause to evaluate but I don't plan to change what I was doing."

Sen. Michael Morrissey doesn't plan any radical change in his thinking.

"He ran a better cam-MICHAEL MORRISSEY paign," he said. "All the issues seemed to be based in Washington. I don't know that it will have an effect on the State House."

"Brown's message was independence. You have a duty to stand up to the leadership. You can't go along to get along.

RON MARIANO

"I stand on my record. I take any campaign seriously."

Reps. Stephen Tobin and Bruce Ayers were unavailable for comment.

"I never thought that lightning would strike twice," said Coughlin, noting that his chilling experiences prompted him to develop the Home Rule Petition.

In both incidents, Coughlin said the drivers were women under 25 years old who were texting while driving at dangerous intersections. At one time, his car was rear-ended on the ramp going north toward Neponset Bridge at Newport Ave. Extension and Hancock Street.

In a second incident, a driver, also, rear-ended Coughlin's car, but this time at the intersection of Merry-mount Pkwy and Hancock Street.

Coughlin acknowledged that his proposed fines were stiff but added, "They're not as stiff as the federal government's."

"The numbers are staggering," said Coughlin who said such drivers are 20 times more likely to have accidents.

Coughlin quoted statistics indicating that 5,870 deaths and 515,000 injuries last year were attributed to what's labeled 'distracted driving.'

To date, 19 states and the District of Columbia have established bans on texting while driving and President Barack Obama has made such bans a priority.

State legislators have discussed the issue, but have not reached any agreement.

From Five Schools To One In Some 30 Years; Quincy Catholic Academy To Open In September

Declining Enrollments, Economic Difficulty Take Toll On Catholic Schools

By TOM HENSHAW

And then there was one. Thirty-odd years ago, five Catholic schools were thriving in Quincy. Then, as economics placed a stranglehold on the country, they began falling. St. John School was the first in the 1970s. St. Joseph went in 2006.

Now, the three remaining Catholic elementary schools in the city will close their doors at the end of the current school year, reopening next September as Quincy Catholic Academy, a central pre-K to 8 school on Hancock Street in North Quincy.

The Rev. John Ronaghan, pastor of St. Ann's Church in Wollaston, blamed the move on "declining enrollment and economic difficulty. It's the future of Catholic education in the city."

The three schools to be closed are St. Ann, St. Mary in West Quincy and Sacred Heart in North Quincy. The trio will be merged as Quincy Catholic Academy and be located at the site of Sacred Heart School, 370 Hancock St.

"Enrollment in the schools was once 1,300," said Fr. Ronaghan. "It's at 658 now. We knew we had to do something. It's happening all across the country."

"Enrollment is critical," said Terry Donilon, spokesman for the Boston Archdiocese. "It costs about $4,000 in tuition. It costs the parish $6,000 to $7,000 to educate a child. We're lucky we have the Peter Lynch group that donates millions a year in scholarships."

"We've been working very hard to bring people together. We've put a lot of study into this, looking at ways to strengthen. The future in Quincy is bright."

An informational meeting was held last week to explain the plan to students, parents and parishioners and the Rev. John O'Brien, pastor of Sacred Heart Church, called it "a good meeting, very helpful."

Sacred Heart School, which will be 50 years old next year, was chosen to house the academy because it is in the best shape of the three, having upgraded its heat and electrical systems and added a fully outfitted kitchen and cafeteria and computer lab. It can hold as many as 800 students.

St. Ann was opened on the same day in 1961 and St. Mary, now the smallest in enrollment with 125 pupils, came on the scene in 1931.

Registration for the academy will begin next month. Students currently in one of the three closed schools will be given preference but youngsters from all over the city are eligible. The new principal will be hired in March in time to select staff and teachers.

Prepping for Spring

DEAR HAMMER: Hope you'll print my tip. Over the winter, I save some of the cold ashes from my fireplace – enough to fill a legal paper-size plastic storage box. (Make sure the ashes are completely cold before removing from the fireplace. You should be able to put your hand in them and not feel any heat.) That's plenty enough for my size yard.

Putting too many ashes in the compost can cause problems with the compost's pH balance, so I keep them separated. Come spring, once the flowers and shrubs have bloomed, I sprinkle a thin layer over the soil around the plants (being careful not to let the ashes touch the stems). This little bit of ash provides extra nutrients for the roots, and seems to keep slugs away, too. — Harry B. in Little Rock, Ark.

DEAR HARRY: Thanks for the tip! This reminder that spring really is around the corner is pretty timely, as homeowners should be getting their outdoor tools and furniture ready for the warm season. It's been a tough, cold winter across the U.S., but believe it or not, it's ending soon.

Now is the time to get that lawnmower fixed and sharpen the blades of cutting tools. Put a fresh coat of all-purpose oil on the metal parts of garden tools and make sure hinges and other moving parts move smoothly. Check wooden and plastic handles for damage and repair or replace them.

In late February, if your part of the country does not have snow on the ground, you can start de-thatching and seeding bare spots in the yard. Leave shrubs tied up or covered until all danger of a hard frost is past.

Outdoor furniture and grills should be opened up, checked for damage, cleaned and made ready for spring. If your grill sat on the deck outside all winter, take the cover off and check for rust, pooled moisture or damage from debris strikes.

HOME TIP: After seeding a bare spot in grass, scatter straw over the area to protect it from birds, rain and snow before the seeds sprout.

Send your home-repair and maintenance questions to homequincy2000@hotmail.com, or write This Is a Hammer, c/o King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Remember, when in doubt as to whether you can safely or effectively complete a project, consult a professional contractor.

Design The Perfect Playroom On A Shoestring Budget

(ARA) - Playrooms are ideal spaces for encouraging children's creativity, providing them with the stimulation they crave and helping them create a connection with others. The great news is that you don't have to build an addition onto the house or set aside your family vacation fund to create a great playroom.

Many unused extra spaces in the home can function as playroom spaces. Whether it's a sewing room you no longer have time for or maybe an extra bedroom that isn't being used, make sure the space is safe and secure for the ages of children who will be playing in it. Spaces under staircases and large closets can make great play areas and give an almost fort-like feel for your child to play make-believe in.

Your next step is to define a goal for the room and take into account who will be using the space. Need some direction? Review online resources for playrooms or visit stores that offer playroom ideas. Places like Ikea, Target and the like can be great resources for fun, functional and inexpensive ideas and designs.

"Create universal spaces that will grow with your children," encourages Nancy Bohnett, academic director of Interior Design at The Art Institute of Las Vegas. "Your first child may be a 3-year-old girl who loves princesses, but she may outgrow her love for pink in a few years and gain a baby brother who will also use the space as he grows."

Once you've got an idea of how you want the room to function, you'll be able to make a list of the items you'll need and want, whether it's an easel for your little artist, bins to store a large collection of blocks or a table for the perfect tea party. You may find that you have many of the items you need, whether they are crammed into your child's current space or stored in the garage.

For the items you need to purchase, take advantage of garage sales, check the listings on Craigslist, find some treasures on eBay or visit a recycled furniture store to pick up pieces you need. With a little TLC and some paint, any piece can make a great addition to your playroom. Closet sweater stackers and over-the-door shoe organizers are great places for coloring books and art supplies.

When it comes to the walls, playrooms should be bright and cheerful, but there's no need to go overboard with paint. "The reality is that children's tastes change as they grow. Creating an accent wall in a favorite color is a great way to bring color to the space and save money. It can be something your kids help with, putting their handprints on the wall or something fun and can be easily changed over time," says Bohnett.

In fact, Bohnett encourages restraint in all the decor. "Be careful not to choose a theme that will be outdated in a short period of time. Allow the toys and creative pieces your children create in the room to dictate the space. You'll save time, money and frustration in the long run," she says.

When it comes to flooring, hard and washable surfaces are ideal for these spaces. "Having floors that can withstand the rigors of childhood play is important for a parent's sanity," says Bohnett.

Don't let a small space rain on your playroom parade. "There are simple ways to make a room feel larger," Bohnett adds. "Do simple things like add a mirror to the room. It can be used for dress-up time and helps the space feel larger." Children can also use washable markers and paints on the mirror, which can easily be cleaned once playtime is over.

Lighting for the space can be a breeze as well. Overhead lights that are already built into the space, daylight and some indirect light are all you need. Grab an old lamp from the garage and paint it to match the new scheme. It's a great way to personalize the space and an inexpensive alternative to a custom child-themed lamp.

Last but not least, don't forget that even in a kids' space, parents need a little room. Make sure there's a comfortable place for you to sit and supervise your children and to have the materials at hand you'll need for the space. Madelene Semeria Opens Red Door Real Estate

Local Quincy real estate agent, Madelene Semeria, announces the opening of Quincy's newest real estate company, Red Door Real Estate.

Semeria finished 2009 as the Top Producing agent for Century 21 Abigail Adams located in Quincy. After five years of working with Century 21, she decided to become the broker/owner of Red Door Real Estate.

Semeria said the shift in the real estate market has given her invaluable experience she feels will make her company a success. She said she has closely re-examined her business strategy and reset her priorities to adapt to the ever changing needs of her clients. She also said her resilient attitude and positive vibe is contagious and most likely may have been the biggest factor in her past successes.

"It is impossible to explain the feeling I get when I hand my clients the keys to their new home," Semeria said.

MADELENE SEMERIA

"That is what keeps me striving and I am excited to see what the upcoming year has in store for Red Door Real Estate."

Semeria has been servicing the Quincy area for the past five years. She said her marketing expertise in property marketing internet exposure offers sellers one of the most aggressive marketing plans in the industry.

Semeria has more than 10 years experience in business and marketing.

Don't Let Your House Take A Beating This Winter

(ARA) - No matter what part of the country you live in, the winter months can be downright abusive on your home. From frozen Minnesotans dropping heaps of water-logged clothing on the floor after digging out of five feet of snow, to tanned Floridians grinding gritty sand into their carpeting, every home takes a beating in the winter.

As harsh as we can be on our most expensive investment, a variety of easy and inexpensive precautions can greatly diminish the amount of winter wear and tear imposed on our homes.

A foot in the door

It all starts at the doorway. For northerners, winter means traipsing in and out of the house with mud, salt and snow on your shoes. And, being bundled up carrying groceries many times means you nudge the door open with those muddy boots, leaving scratched paint and stains on perhaps the most visible part of your home. A simple solution to this is investing in a durable kickplate.

Kickplates are available in a variety of sizes, finishes and quality. Choose something that complements the door's hardware (doorknob and knocker) and will be an appropriate size. Standard 6 1/2-foot doors should use the corresponding 34 inch wide by 6 inch tall kickplate. Larger doors allow for taller and wider plates.

Baseboards that say "bring it on"

Baseboards are often overlooked until they are so dirty and worn that they stand out like a sore thumb. By design, baseboards are meant to preserve the lower portion of walls and withstand normal bumps and scuffs. However, choosing an appropriate paint for these baseboards can make all the difference when it comes to durability.

Paints designed especially for heavy traffic and easy cleaning are best for baseboards. Look for interior latex paints infused with stain resistant materials. One paint manufacturer, Pratt & Lambert, actually offers a line of paint called Porcelain, which contains tiny porcelain particles that bond together in such a way that stains cannot penetrate the surface of the paint. And, because of the paint's strength, if dirt or spills do splash the surface, you can scrub the paint without damaging the finish.

Clean carpets

Tile, laminate and wood flooring are incredibly easy to clean because they are not extremely porous. Carpet, on the other hand, is designed to be lush, meaning there are ample nooks, crannies and spaces for dirt and grime to hide.

Investing in a stain-resistant carpet cleaner that repels such substances from entering your carpet will maintain your carpet's vitality and cleanliness. Keeping do-it-yourself spot carpet cleaners on hand when minor spills occur is essential when entertaining. Just a few sprays and a little elbow grease will diminish stains and not put a damper on the party.

Slip and slide

Even through your house may have tile, laminate or wood floors, tracking outdoor substances such as muddy water or slush on them can add wear and tear, especially during the holiday season. And constantly cleaning up after guests' muddy footprints can be exhausting.

Simple carpet runners can help prevent these unsightly and potentially dangerous issues. Many retail stores sell solid-colored and seasonally styled carpet runners that have a non-skid backing and are machine washable. Placing a few of these in heavily trafficked areas will reduce damage to all types of flooring and will provide safe pathways for walking.

Kitchen consideration

You might not think of it at first, but kitchens take quite a beating during the winter months. As the central point of congregation for family gatherings, dinners and simple evenings at home, kitchens see quite a bit of traffic during the winter.

Because of the increased use, kitchen cabinets endure a lot more bumps during the winter, but cabinet finishes can be spared with a few easy solutions. First, if your cabinets are not painted, apply a varnish that will act as a barrier against scuffing. If they are painted, reapply the color in a paint that is meant to withstand heavy traffic. A quality Purdy brush is critical to a flawless finish.

Any local hardware store should stock corner protectors. The edges of your kitchen cabinetry or islands often take the brunt of the damage because you have to maneuver around them. Wood or plastic corner protectors will help diminish this damage and can, if you like, be removed at the end of the winter.

These simple tips will protect some of your home's most frequently damaged areas, and help ensure a lasting durability.

Dollars and sense

Clock Is Ticking for Homebuyers

The $8,000 tax credit for first-time homebuyers has been extended, but only until the end of April. To take advantage of the credit, you must have a house under contract by that time and close within 60 days. Additionally, another category of homebuyer has been added: Those who have owned (and lived in) their current homes for at least five years may qualify for a $6,500 credit if they buy another home.

If you're ready to buy now, step one is to get yourself pre-approved. Don't mistake "pre-qualified" for "pre-approved," because they're not the same thing. Pre-qualifications are preliminary, informal "running the numbers," and often can be done by phone. The lender at the other end will ask about your income and expenses and determine if you have the right debt-to-income ratio, and might do a fast credit check to see what your FICO score is.

Pre-approval involves all of the above, with many extra steps, mostly involving showing paperwork to the lender. It'll need to verify all your information. At the end of that process, if you're qualified, you'll be told that you're pre-approved. This is the point where you ask for that pre-approval in writing. You'll know your price range and won't waste time on homes you can't afford. That pre-approval also will help you when you submit an offer: The seller will know you're serious. Additionally, you'll likely be able to close faster as much of the paperwork will have been completed.

Some caveats about buying a home in the winter: If there's snow on the ground and the roof, it can hide a number of problems. Solution: Check Google maps satellite photos of the house. Those photos are generally taken in the fall when there's no snow on the ground and fewer leaves on the trees to block visibility. Google maps also will show you a street view in many locations. If the house doesn't look the same as it does now, or if you see a blue tarp on the roof, ask questions. You also can check the yards of your potential neighbors and businesses around you. Unless you know the area very well, you could discover creeks, dumps and junkyards you didn't know were there.

Team In Midst of Three-Game Losing Streak

Presidents Need to Regroup

By SEAN BRENNAN

A rough stretch of games has placed the Quincy High School girls basketball team in a position in which they will now have to win three out of their last six games in order to qualify for the post-season tournament.

Quincy (7-7 overall, 5-5 in the Patriot League) had been rolling. After knocking off non-league opponent Plymouth South High School, 54-45, on Jan. 18, the team was flying sky-high with an impressive four-game winning streak, but a difficult three-game Patriot League schedule last week, brought the team back to earth.

"Right now we are trying to get back some of that confidence that we had been playing with earlier this month," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch. "We are at that point in the season where I am not sure which team is going to show up to play. This team is capable of playing well against anyone, but we need to regain our confidence and I know we have the ability and talent to rebound and make a run at the tournament."

"This is a key moment in our season. We know how good we can be. It is a matter of committing ourselves, working hard, and we must really try to get our offense going again."

Following the victory over Plymouth South, a team that had previously defeated the Presidents by 14 points earlier in the season, Quincy started its Patriot League-week with an away game against the highly talented Whitman-Hanson Panthers.

The Presidents took one on the chin against Whitman-Hanson and lost 51-33.

Solid individual performances were put in by sophomore forward/center Kiley McDonald (14 points, ten rebounds) and junior guard Kori Sorensen (nine points), but it was not enough as the Panthers smothered Quincy's half-court offense en route to the double-digit victory.

"(Whitman-Hanson) is one of the better teams in the Patriot League," said Bretsch. "They play a fundamental game and their half-court man-to-man defense really shut our offense down. But we didn't do that good of a job executing our offense."

"They are always a good, strong team and this season they are right back near the top of the league again. They are a tough team to play against."

Quincy played Scituate High School last Friday, and the Sailors, one of the Patriot League's other powerhouses gave the Presidents no chance to regroup. Scituate, like Whitman-Hanson, shut down Quincy's offensive flow and came away with a 53-39 victory.

Sorensen (11 points) and seniors Leslie Campbell (ten points) and Colleen Tobin (nine points) led the way for QHS in this game.

"This game was the second of three straight tough league games," added Bretsch. "We had a hard time against their defensive pressure, and they did an excellent job of executing their offense, and we could do nothing to get ours moving in the right direction."

"These league games are a good test for my team, and I thought we held our own on defense, but we just couldn't get anything positive going to the basket."

On Monday, the Presidents endured another body blow as the team traveled to Duxbury HS to play the Dragons. Duxbury jumped out to a 23-2 first quarter advantage, and despite playing better in the second quarter (Quincy cut the Duxbury lead to 12 points), the Presidents could never recover, and lost their third straight game.

Kiley McDonald led all Quincy scorers with 12 points and nine rebounds.

"That was a tough stretch of games," said Bretsch. "We had been playing really well, so let's see how we respond over our final six games. We are a team that has good senior leadership and talented underclassmen; the seniors are going to have to step up and lead this team. They are going to have to play well and they will."

"All of them know what it takes to make the tournament and we are confident that we will regain that confidence and make a late-season run."

"No excuses, but Whitman-Hanson, Scituate and Duxbury are all strong teams. We have played four straight teams that should be tournament bound. We need to finish strong but it has been a remarkably good year for my team."

Notes: Senior captain Leslie Campbell scored 16 points against Plymouth South... Kiley McDonald finished the Plymouth South game with 15 points... The 54-45 victory over Plymouth South was Quincy's fourth in a row... The Presidents are scheduled to play Hingham HS on Friday (NQHS, 5:15 p.m.) and Pembroke on Feb. 1 (NQHS, 5:15 p.m.).

Winners of Three-Out-of-Four Games

NQ Raiders Go Cold Versus Pembroke

By SEAN BRENNAN

The North Quincy Red Raiders, coming off an impressive victory over Quincy High School on Jan. 15, went cold offensively against Patriot League opponent Pembroke High School last Friday, and dropped a 60-54 decision.

North Quincy (6-7 overall) now needs to win four of their last seven games to earn a spot in the post-season.

Against Pembroke, the Red Raiders closed the first quarter with a 22-20 lead. Senior captain Johnna Coates scored ten first quarter points, including three three-pointers to lead the early offensive charge. Co-captain Mike Stanton chipped in with seven first quarter points and junior guard Mike Morrison added five points.

Coates finished the game with a team-high 24 points; Stanton finished with 18 points.

The Raiders expanded that early advantage to 31-20 in the second quarter, but Pembroke reeled off a 14-2 scoring run to end the half, and took a 34-33 lead into the locker room.

For North Quincy, the game was lost during a frigid third quarter. Pembroke held the Raiders scoreless until Stanton scored on an easy back-door layup with ten seconds to go before the end of the quarter. By that point the Titans had moved ahead 44-35.

Without any second-half offensive support, North Quincy remained in contention because it played solid team defense throughout the game. Unfortunately, and despite cutting Pembroke's advantage to 49-47 late in the fourth quarter, the Raiders ran out of time, and dropped a tough decision.

"For us, it all starts on the defensive end," said NQHS head coach Kevin Barrett. "Our goal in every game is to hold teams to 50 points or under. That is how we have had success all season."

"Against Pembroke, we played really well defensively, but we could not capitalize offensively, which was too bad because Pembroke was about as cold as us scoring baskets. One silver lining is that our defense did keep us in this game. Even when we go cold shooting the ball, our defense has the ability to keep us in games."

The Raiders have the opportunity to get back to .500 when they host Rockland High School on Friday (NQHS, 7 p.m.). North Quincy will close out their schedule with a home game against Hingham HS on Feb. 1, two straight road games versus Whitman-Hanson HS (Feb. 3) and Silver Lake HS (Feb. 5), a home tilt against Duxbury HS on Feb. 9, and an away game versus Scituate HS on Feb. 11.

The team ends its regular season by playing in the Davenport Classic at Sharon High School Feb. 14-15.

"There is no question that the team is excited about the prospect of playing to get into the post-season," said Barrett. "Even with this loss we have won three-out-of-four games. We will forget about the Pembroke game and look forward to the game with Rockland. A win puts us right back into position and would give us four wins in our last five games."

"We need to play well, but the post-season is still in play."

Notes: The North Quincy High School girls' basketball team picked up its third victory of the season on Jan. 22 with a 52-39 win over Pembroke HS... The Raiders' record stands at 3-10 overall and 2-7 in the Patriot League... Montana McBirney scored 13 points, had six blocks and finished with six rebounds... Anna Holcomb scored 13 points, finished with six rebounds and had three steals... The girls' team will play two home games next week against Whitman-Hanson HS (Feb. 3) and Silver Lake HS (Feb. 5).

Track Team Closes Dual Meet Season With Win

The Quincy/North Quincy girls' track team broke into the win column for the first time following a 59-28 win over Randolph High School at the Reggie Lewis Track Center.

Freshman Rose Bennett had a big day; she cleared 4'09" in the high jump for the win and also won the hurdles. Bennett also took third-place in the long jump.

Lia Bonoli won in the 600-meters with a personal-best time of 1:57; Erica Brady finished her season undefeated in the distance events leading a team sweep of the 1000-meters. Julie Ross won the one-mile race and Si-Han Huang won the shot put.

The 4 x 400 relay team of Mary Schwartz, Brady, Ross and Bonoli closed out a team victory with a best time of 4:47.

Other Q/NQ scorers included Danielle Paschall and Mabel Setow in the 300-meters; Quintessa Petit and Jess Abban in the 55-meters; Jen Scarnici in the 600-meters; Julie Doyle and Mary Schwartz in the 1000-meters; Kaleigh McKeon and Cristina Doherty in the shot put, and Schwartz in the high jump.

MA State Relays
Despite not scoring, several good performances were put in by Q/NQ athletes at the MA State Relays.

The shot put team of Sarah Spargo, Sarah Minton and Cristina Doherty totaled 70 feet; the shuttle dash team of Kayla Sugrue, Jess Abban, Mabel Setow and Shannon McCleary won their heat, and that same foursome ran the 4 x 200 relay in a season-best time of 2:03.24.

The distance crew of Erica Brady, Mary Schwartz, Lia Bonoli and Julie Ross participated in the 4 x 800 meter race and the distance medley.

With the dual meet schedule complete, the championship season now begins. Mary Schwartz will represent Q/NQ in the 1000-meters at the MSTCA Coaches Invitational on Jan. 30, and Erica Brady will compete in the two-mile on Jan. 31 in the MSTCA Elite Meet, an event reserved for the top 24 in each event statewide.

As Part of "Skill and Drills" Program

Suffolk University Basketball Team Visits Montclair School

By SEAN BRENNAN

Much to the excitement and awe of first and third graders at Quincy's Montclair School, the Suffolk University Men's Basketball team visited the school during the week of January 11 as part of the team's "Skills and Drills" program, which is designed to serve as a valuable experience for both the Suffolk University athletes and for the children at the elementary school level.

The program included the student-athletes breaking into small groups and reading to first graders from Chris Paul's book Long Shot—a book about following one's dreams and never giving up, and working with the third graders, using a basketball box score, on a math lesson.

The program then moved from the classrooms to the gym where the Suffolk University basketball players and students enjoyed some fun basketball skills and where the kids had the opportunity to watch the team play a scrimmage.

Quincy resident Deb Nelson, who developed this program, which is now in its fifth year, is a fourth grade teacher in Dorchester, and the program is run by her husband, Adam Nelson, the head basketball coach for the Suffolk Rams.

"This is a great program and my wife is the one who puts together the curriculum and coordinates our school visits," said Adam Nelson. "This is our fifth year doing the program and it seems like the little kids really appreciate my players coming to their schools."

"The young kids really look up to them. It is also a great way for my players to understand that they have a responsibility to give back to the community and also understand that there is more to being a student-athlete than just playing basketball."

For the youngsters at Montclair, having the team come and visit and take the time to teach them valuable lessons was exciting.

"These kids are so young that when the team shows up you would think that the Boston Celtics had arrived," said Nelson. "The kids really look up to these guys. They are so big and tall and the kids are usually in awe of them."

"It was a great time and hopefully we can continue to do it in the future."

Among the players who came to visit Montclair was Quincy native Matt Pepdjonovic, a freshman center on the Suffolk University Rams. A Boston College High School graduate, Pepdjonovic is among Nelson's most talented players.

"Matt is a Quincy kid, so that was cool he got to come back and be a part of this program," added Nelson, whose two sons, Jack and AJ, attend Montclair. He also has a daughter Molly. "It was an enjoyable experience."

Nelson, who is in his fifth season as head coach, has a team that is currently 5-10 overall playing in the Greater New England Athletic Conference.

QUINCY RESIDENTS Ali Fareri, Bridget Durkin and Victoria Galvin are part of the 2009-2010 Archbishop Williams High School Cheerleading team heading to Orlando, Florida in March for the US Spirit National Championships. Other team members include Lindsay Joyce, Corinna Farrell, Catalina Kirk, Lindsey Sayers, Lexi Hansen, Ali Grasso, Jackie Grasso, Rachael Feinberg, Amanda Newcomb, Jamie Sheehan, Anna Kirwan and Melissa Barosy.

Team Heading To Florida for Nationals

Quincy Residents Part of AWHs Cheerleading Squad

Three Quincy residents are among a group of Archbishop Williams High School cheerleaders who will be heading to Orlando, Florida to take part in the United States Spirit National Championships in March.

The team recently finished a very successful season. Archbishop Williams earned first-place at the Central Catholic League Competition, went on to become the Massachusetts South Regional Champions, and, at the MA State Competition, the team earned their bid to compete in the US Spirit National Championships in Florida.

This accomplishment marked the first time a Bishops' cheerleading has qualified for the Nationals.

The team will be holding a fundraiser on Friday, March 5 to help defray the cost of the expenses needed to travel to Florida. The event, which is being called "A National State of Mind," will be an evening of Altered States & Comedy, featuring Frank Santos, Jr., Comic/Hypnotist. It will be held from 6-9 p.m. and include refreshments, and a bucket raffle.

The fundraiser will be held at the AWHs Auditorium, 80 Independence Ave., Braintree. Tickets are $20. For tickets or for additional information, call 617-291-9644 or 781-843-3636.

QRD Announces Girls Soccer Skills Program

The Quincy Recreation Department announced earlier this month that it is once again conducting an eight-week Soccer Skills Program for girls as part of its evening recreation gym program.

This program, according to Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, will feature activities and instruction to improve the fundamental soccer skills of each youngster; the participants will also take part in mini-games.

The program is offered on Monday nights and began Jan. 25 and there are two separate sessions. The girls Grades 5-7 program will be held from 6-7 p.m. at Broad Meadows Middle School and the girls Grades 8-11 will be held from 7:30-9 p.m. at the same location.

Don Martin, head girls' soccer coach at QHS, will direct the program. Members of the QRD staff will assist Martin. Registration was taken on the first night of the program and is ongoing and will be limited; after the registration period, participants will begin their first night of training.

All participants are required to wear sneakers and appropriate gym attire.

The program is set to conclude on March 22 and there will be no program on Presidents Day (Feb. 15).

For additional information, please call the QRD at 617-376-1394 or go online to www.QuincyRec.com.

IMPORTANT CHANGE NOTICE FROM QYH

The Quincy Youth Hockey Board of Directors recently voted to move our registration to January 28th, 29th and 30th. You must register your player during these dates to be placed on a 2010/2011 team (no house waivers will be granted for this season).

The Annual Meeting will be held January 5, 2010 at 7pm here at the arena — nominations for new board members will be taken at this meeting.

BOY SCOUTS FROM Troop 42 (Quincy Center) took part in the 2010 NHL Winter Classic at Fenway Park on New Year's Day. The over 180 Boy Scouts pictured were on the fabled lawn of Fenway Park before the game between the Boston Bruins and the Philadelphia Flyers, filling the roles of flag bearers and honor guard during the 30-minute opening ceremonies. The Quincy Boy Scouts in this photo were primarily from Troop 42, about 50 of them, but there was also one Boy Scout from Troop 6 in Houghs Neck who took part in the event.

Individual Performances Highlight Season

Quincy Presidents Gaining Experience On The Mats Through Hard Work

By SEAN BRENNAN

The Quincy High School wrestling team may not have the most impressive regular season record so far this season (2-12 overall, 1-2 in the Patriot League's Fisher Division), but that does not mean that the squad has not had some very good individual performances this winter.

Under the direction of head coach Patrick Lane, the Presidents, this season, have had to fill in some key spots following the departure of several talented seniors off of last year's Patriot League Keenan Division championship team, a team that finished 4-0-1 in league meets. It has been a challenge to say the least, but improvement for future seasons is certainly attainable.

"We have struggled this year in meets," said Lane on Tuesday. "Last year we were so successful because we had that senior experience and the kids knew what to expect when they hit the mats."

"The good news is that we have a great number of freshmen and sophomores who are getting that valuable wrestling experience. It has been a little frustrating for some of the older wrestlers that we have been struggling this winter, but in the next few years we should see all of these kids really improve.

"The influx of freshmen and sophomores is great for the program, but, as I have said, they are not all 'mat ready.' Sometimes you have to take it on the chin, and that is what this season has been all about. Next year should be better."

Following last Friday's 48-36 loss to North Quincy High School, the Presidents have just one Patriot League meet left on their schedule. The team will wrestle against Rockland and Scituate High Schools on Feb. 2; this Saturday Quincy will host a quad meet at the Dungeon Wrestling Club (10 a.m. start time).

With the team portion of the schedule coming to a close, individual meets are the next big step for many Quincy wrestlers. Senior captain Josh Gerry (27-1 overall this season) is the one Quincy wrestler to keep an eye on.

Gerry, who last year took first-place in the Division II tournament, marking the high school's first individual state champion since 2002, garnered several individual awards in 2008-2009.

Wrestling at 125 pounds, Gerry also finished fifth at the New England tournament, second at the All-States and first in the Division II Metro Sectionals.

This season he will look to duplicate those results at the 130-pound weight class.

"Josh has been awesome again this year for us," said Lane about his star wrestler. "He is 27-1, he finished in second-place at the Lowell Holiday Tournament, which is probably one of the hardest tournaments in New England; he is currently ranked second in his weight class at his weight and he captured first-place in the Weymouth Tournament earlier this month."

"His goals are the same as last year and I am confident that he has the ability to do it again."

Other Quincy wrestlers who have been solid performers this season include senior captain Mike Kneeland (189 pounds) and senior Luke McLellan (135 pounds). Underclassmen Ben Cheney (103 pounds), David Hanna (125 pounds), CJ Brooks (160 pounds), Tyler Griffin (145 pounds) and Jake Hynes (152 pounds) are also wrestlers who should make waves this post-season and in the years to come.

"Guys like Ben Cheney, who has been exceptional, Hanna, Brooks, Griffin and Hynes are all good wrestlers and should do well as we move forward," said Lane. "They are all involved with the sport both in-season and during the off-season and I am expecting all of them to really improve moving forward."

The tournament season will begin in earnest on Feb. 6 when the Sectional Team Tournament gets underway. The Division I Sectional Dual Meet Tournament is set for Feb. 6; the Division I Central Sectionals will take place on Feb. 13; the States are set for Feb. 19-20 and the All-States will be held Feb. 26-27.

The New England Championships, the Holy Grail for local high school wrestlers, will be held on March 5-6.

Notes: The following are the meet results for the Quincy Presidents: Dec. 12, 66-9 loss to Franklin; Dec. 12, win over Dracut, 42-36; Dec. 12, 60-24 loss to Nashoba; Dec. 16, 48-9 loss to Greater Lowell; Dec. 23, 30-18 loss to Arlington; Dec. 23, 56-9 loss to CM; Dec. 23, 33-16 loss to Boston Latin; Jan. 6, 42-24 loss to Hanover; Jan. 9, 26-6 loss to Carver; Jan. 9, 27-19 loss to Xaverian; Jan. 9, 25-4 loss to New Bedford; Jan. 12, 40-33 win over Randolph; Jan. 20, 57-9 loss to Pembroke; Jan. 22, 48-36 loss to North Quincy.

REQUEST FOR DESIGNER SERVICES (RFS)

REQUEST FOR DESIGNER SERVICES (RFS)

City of Quincy, MA
Quincy Public Schools

Central Middle School Project

Invitation: The City of Quincy ("Owner") is seeking the services of a qualified "Designer" within the meaning of M.G.L. Chapter 7, Section 38A½, to provide professional design and construction administration services for the new Central Middle School in Quincy, Massachusetts. Selection of a Designer will be made by the Designer Selection Panel of the Massachusetts School Building Authority ("MSBA") in accordance with the MSBA's Designer Selection Procedures.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS DESIGNER SERVICES-NEW CENTRAL MIDDLE SCHOOL FEBRUARY 19, 2010 @ 3:00P.M.

The Owner is seeking design services which will include the development and evaluation of potential alternative solutions and continue through the Schematic Design Phase. Subject to the approval of a Project by the MSBA and further subject to adequate funding authorized by the Owner, the contract between the Owner and the Designer may be amended to include continued designer services through design development, construction contract documents, bidding, award of construction contract(s), construction administration, final closeout and warranty period of the potential Project. The potential Project will include new construction at a site different from the current Central Middle School location.

The estimated construction budget for a potential Project may range from $35 million to $45 million depending upon the solution that is agreed upon by the Owner and the MSBA and that which is ultimately approved by a vote of the MSBA's Board of Directors. The Fee for Basic Services will be negotiated.

Pursuant to M.G.L. Chapter 7, Section 40N, the Designer must agree to contract with minority and women-owned businesses as certified by the State Office of Minority and Women Business Assistance (SOMWBA). The amount of participation that shall be reserved for such enterprises shall not be less than eight percent (8%) of the contract price for minority business enterprises and four percent (4%) of the contract for women-owned business enterprises. The minority and women-owned business enterprises must be selected from those categories of work identified in this RFS.

For additional information on Designer qualifications, detailed specifications are available on February 3, 2010 at the office of the Purchasing Agent, Quincy City Hall, 1305 Hancock Street, Quincy, Massachusetts 02169, between the hours of 8:30 AM to 4:30 PM.

'Four Chaplains Sunday' Feb. 7

Quincy Veterans Services Department reminds the public that Sunday, Feb. 7, 2010, has been mandated by the Congress of the United States as "Four Chaplains' Sunday."

Early in the morning of Feb. 3, 1943, the Troop Transport Dorchester was wallowing through the icy seas off Greenland. Most of the 900 troops on board were asleep in their bunks. Suddenly a torpedo smashed the Dorchester's flank. Frantically pounding up the ladders, the troops milled in confusion on the decks.

In those dark moments of panic, the coolest men aboard were four U.S. Army Chaplains: 1st Lieutenants Clark L. Poling (Reform Church of America), Alexander D. Goode (Jewish), John P. Washington (Catholic) and George L. Fox (Methodist).

The four chaplains led the men to boxes of life jackets and passed them out to soldiers with boat drill precision. When the boxes were empty, the four chaplains slipped off their own precious life preservers, put them on the four GIs and told them to jump.

The Dorchester went down 25 minutes later in a rumble of steam. Some 600 men were lost; the heroic chaplains had helped to save over 200. The last anyone saw of them, they were standing on the slanted deck, their arms linked in prayer to the one God they all served.

However, moving reassuringly among the frightened men were the four chaplains. These chaplains worked to calm the men and handed out available life jackets. Soon the supply of extra life jackets ran out, calmly and without hesitation, all four chaplains stripped off their own life jackets, giving them to the frightened men near them, never asking whether they were Protestant, Catholic or Jewish. It is said that these men of faith linked arms, bowed their heads, and each in their own manner, led the men in prayer, putting their lives in the hands of God.

Survivors recounted the sight and sound of that terrible night picturing those four chaplains who performed a tremendously heroic act.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

SUPERSTITIONS . . . Are you a superstitious person? What are your feelings about walking under ladders, avoiding black cats, broken mirrors, knocking on wood?

Superstitions have fretted people with fears and follies a long, long time. The worldwide habit of believing in supernatural influence dates back to Plato's time—400 years B.C.—perhaps longer. Some people are very superstitious. You will never convince them that superstition may be nothing other than an unfounded idea or a coincidence. . . In fact, superstitions are often funny and it requires a sense of humor to witness the antics and behavior of some people who are superstitious. Mostly, superstitions are harmless—as long as a custom or legend does not disturb a mind with incredulity or contempt of Divine Power.

Robert J. Kachinsky, 72

Civil Engineer

A funeral Mass for Robert J. Kachinsky, 72, of Quincy, a civil engineer and past president of the Quincy Rotary Club, was celebrated Tuesday at St. Agatha's Church, Milton.

Mr. Kachinsky died Jan. 21 surrounded by family after battling cancer.

He is survived by his wife of 46 years, Pat (Grant) Kachinsky; his daughters, Carolyn Stys of Virginia, Lisa Hickey of Weymouth, Beth O'Brien of Groton, and Amy Alessi of West Roxbury; his sister Judith Micciche; and nine grandchildren.

A son of Southie and longtime resident of Milton and Quincy, Mr. Kachinsky was a 1955 graduate of Boston Latin High School. He earned degrees in engineering from Northeastern University.

During his 38-year career for CDM, he applied his skills to providing sanitation and clean water to those in need around the globe.

He estimated he traveled 3 million miles visiting more than 100 countries but no one can estimate the number of lives he touched by providing such fundamental public health resources.

Mr. Kachinsky lived and worked in Egypt, a country that fascinated him since childhood. His self taught knowledge of Egyptian history and his engineering talents earned him the respect and friendship of many archaeologists. It also granted him the opportunity to help map and protect Egypt's monuments.

Mr. Kachinsky was often accompanied in his travels by his wife and "best pal," Pat, and their four daughters. He readily acknowledged that he could not have accomplished what he had without his wife by his side. His daughters are forever indebted to him for the education in history and foreign cultures he provided.

After his retirement, Mr. Kachinsky shared his talents with Boston's Muddy River Project, Quincy's Zoning Board, USAID in Afghanistan and the St. Rock Foundation in Haiti.

He was a past president of the Quincy Rotary Club.

He shared his love of Egypt by visiting elementary schools and by teaching a course in the OLLI program at UMass Boston. He often successfully encouraged others to see the wonders of Egypt.

Mr. Kachinsky took much pride and joy in his family, especially his nine grandchildren. He had a kind and generous heart and a wonderful sense of humor making him a cherished husband, father, papa and friend.

Interment was at Blue Hill Cemetery, Braintree.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Keohane Funeral Home, Quincy.

Memorial donations may be made to The Christian Appalachia Project P.O. Box 511 Lancaster, KY 40444-0511.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You need to be certain that all the right conditions are in place before you take that first step. It can't hurt to listen to good advice from those who have your best interests at heart.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Be careful not to get involved in other people's disputes unless you know the facts behind the disagreements. That's the best way to be assured of making wise and honest decisions.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You still need to be careful about how you're going to spend those energy reserves you finally got around to restoring. Best advice: Avoid overdoing it. Let things take their course.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Your aspect continues to favor travel -- alone or with that special person. So if you've been putting off making those get-away plans, it's still a good time to get started on them.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Those so-called golden opportunities that continue to dazzle the Lion still need to be carefully checked out. Be suspicious about anything that looks like the "perfect" prospect.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Changes at the workplace could make it more difficult to do things the way you prefer. But the wise Virgo who shows some flexibility could find it paying off in a big way.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) You might want to check out the explanation you were given for a sudden shift in your duties. There's a possibility that you haven't been told all the facts that you deserve to know.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Having confidence in your abilities is important, especially when you could be facing a new challenge, whether it's in the workplace or in a personal relationship. Good luck.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A new work-related opportunity might not be all that it seems. Before making any decisions, you might want to check with others who have had some experience in that area.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A situation involving someone close could benefit from your timely intervention. Avoid being judgmental. There'll be plenty of time later for those "little talks" you like to have.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Travel could be a surprise element in that new project. Be prepared for other previously undisclosed aspects that also might come to light as you proceed with the work.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Try to balance your work-related responsibilities with the time you're spending on your recently revived social life. An old friend might be planning to return after a long absence.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your sensitivity makes you aware of the needs of others. Have you considered a career as a counselor?

Aquarium Holding Area At Former Shipyard Warehouse be a tremendous addition to the existing space, bringing an important facility to the region. The aquarium's presence will be one of the cornerstones of the area's rebirth, as we look to bring in new and vital enterprises to the shipyard, stimulating growth for the local business community.

"We couldn't prouder that they're (aquarium) housed here. It allows this place to beam with opportunity."

The marine animal rescue team rescues and rehabilitates stranded, injured and diseased marine animals from along the Massachusetts and New Hampshire coast. The animals include whales, dolphins, porpoises and seals. The main focus, however, is the rehabilitation of endangered sea turtles. In late autumn, dozens to hundreds of the turtles are stranded on Cape Cod beaches because of hypothermia. The new facility will offer the complex and lengthy medical treatment the turtles require. Once healthy, the animals are released back into the wild.

Senator Bill Delahunt said the addition of the holding area was just one of another facelifts the city is undergoing. "This is an exciting movement for the city," he said. "In the future, students in the city will have the opportunity to come witness the mammals and fish."

"It's a good moment for this city and this region," Mayor Thomas Koch welcomed the collaboration. "We are thrilled to welcome the New England Aquarium, a beloved and important institution to our entire region for decades and now another example that the City of Quincy is working hard to create new jobs and spur economic growth at the shipyard and beyond," said Koch.

Walter Flaherty, the aquarium's chief operating officer and treasurer, said the facility would be built in phases over the next several years. Locations in Charlestown, South Boston and East Boston were considered before the shipyard was picked. He said it was a good central spot because of its closeness to Boston and the accessibility to salt water.

"This is going to be very animal intensive," said Flaherty. "This is a critical facility for us. It adds much needed flexibility for our rescue team."

Ward 2 Councilor Dan Raymondi pointed out that the shipyard was the city's "economic engine for decades" and the partnership with the aquarium was a positive one. "We look forward to years and years of collaboration," said Raymondi.

Parkway Construction Bids Advertised remaining demolition work – including the Quincy Fair Mall – is expected to be advertised for bid this weekend.

"This is a major step forward for this long-planned project, which will create new jobs this year and provide the foundation on which the future of Quincy Center will be built," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "So many people are working incredibly hard on this project – from our Planning Department to our state leaders keeping it a priority on Beacon Hill to Congressman Delahunt's work to secure federal funding."

The $8 million Hancock Street crossing will be paid for by federal stimulus money. A $6 million federal transportation earmark previously set aside for the road project will be able to be used for other transportation-related infrastructure downtown, officials said.

"The City of Quincy is truly on the verge of a renaissance," said Congressman Bill Delahunt. "This parkway is a vital part of Quincy Center's future because of the construction jobs it will create in the short term and the new opportunities for economic growth and job creation in the years ahead."

Construction on the project's final phase will begin as a $4.3 million phase rebuilding McGrath Highway is finishing up this year. That part of the project, between Washington Street and Southern Artery (Route 3A) includes wider sidewalks, new traffic signals, bike lanes, new trees and plantings, and a median strip.

The most complex part of that phase, re-locating utilities underground, took place last year and residents should begin to see the progress on the street level this year.

The goal of the full project, which also includes the existing Paul Harold Bridge connecting downtown's parking areas to Burgin Parkway, is two-fold. To end the downtown traffic bottleneck by creating easier access to and from the Southeast Expressway and create a new environment downtown to attract private investment.

Construction of the road comes as the City continues to negotiate with master developer, Street-Works, LLC on a full redevelopment plan for Quincy Center.

Central Plans Moving Forward

Mayor Thomas Koch and the Central Middle School Building Committee are moving forward on several key steps toward planning the long-needed new school, steps that will trigger a series of community meetings in the near future to outline plans for residents and address concerns, officials said.

The City, working with the Central Building Committee, recently sent out a formal advertisement seeking an architect for the project, and School Department provided the Massachusetts School Building Authority with an extensive enrollment report outlining current conditions and future projections for a new school.

"We are pressing ahead, and the community is going to be involved every step of the way on this vital project," Koch said. "These are tangible steps toward our goal of building a much needed new building for our school children in the most cost-effective way possible."

The Central Building Committee is working hard, our partners at the state level are actively involved, and we are all looking forward to making continued progress together with the community."

The architect selection process runs in collaboration with the SBA, and it will be spring before an architect is hired. According to SBA guidelines, the Central Building Committee will review applications and submit a list of qualified applicants to the SBA's designer selection panel, which will continue to pare down applicants and ultimately approve the architect selection.

In addition to SBA officials, the designer selection panel will include three representatives from Quincy – Superintendent Richard DeCristofaro, City Solicitor James Timmins and Central Principal Jennifer Faye-Beers.

"This is a very methodical, orderly process conducted in close collaboration with the SBA to ensure the most qualified architect is hired," said School Committee member Jo-Ann Bragg, who is a member of the Central Building Committee.

Added School Committee Vice Chairwoman Anne Mahoney, who is also a Building Committee member.

"We are working closely with all of the stakeholders – the SBA, our Schools, the City Council and the public – to foster a smooth process that guarantees the plan will be fully vetted"

The Central Building Committee also recently formed a subcommittee to coordinate public outreach, which will include multiple public meetings in coming months. School Committee members Mahoney and Bragg, Mayor Koch's office, and Building Committee parents' advocate Terry Scuzzarella will coordinate the outreach efforts.

Police Nab High Tech Looters At Local ATM

By TOM HENSHAW

Every time science comes up with an unbeatable high tech plan to protect our money those with larceny in their hearts come up with a high tech plan to defeat them.

It happened in Quincy last week when Ivaylo Hristov, a Bulgarian who gave his address as Thornhill, Ont., was arrested in the Citizens Bank at 371 Hancock St., North Quincy, with $500 withdrawn from a Quincy man's account.

It wasn't that he did it as much as how he did it.

With two companions, Hristov installed an illegal 'skimmer' device to steal account information from the magnetic strip on the back of the card and a tiny pin hole camera to record PIN numbers as the user entered them.

Christine Sterling, spokeswoman for the U.S. District Attorney, said Hristov and his friends, Anton

To Host Community Meetings In Spring Koch: Detailed Financial Report

The Koch administration will create a first-of-its-kind detailed financial report providing residents "the most precise picture possible," of city spending as part of ongoing transparency efforts.

The goal, Mayor Thomas Koch said, is to lay out public finances in easy-to-read detail that will go beyond the traditional budget process. The mayor added that he is likely to hold a series of community meetings in the spring to discuss the city's finances.

"We started by opening the books and fully laying out our problems and costs. Providing a more detailed report is another step in making government more open to our residents," Koch said. "We face incredible challenges financially over the next several years, and we want the community involved."

The report will include break-outs for a wide range of items, for example, a more detailed breakdown of the city's total debt load. Debt is traditionally listed in the annual budget as one figure, and Koch said he plans to have the report show the specific projects that are being financed by the city's annual debt load.

Sue Harris Stepping Down After 5 Years Broad Search For New College President

By LAURA GRIFFIN

President Sue Harris set Quincy College on solid ground during her nearly five year tenure and her successor should be one with strong roots in the academic community, according to David Dennis, Chairman of the Board of Governors.

Dennis said Monday he hopes that the board will begin developing the search process for a new president at their next meeting, tentatively set for Feb. 11.

Council Welcomes New Chamber Of Commerce Suggest Long 'To-Do' List

City councillors Monday lauded the newly reorganized Chamber of Commerce, then proposed a 'to-do' list for chamber leaders on such issues as improving the city's gateways, eliminating blighted properties, community workshops, and easing Quincy Center relocations.

"We're here to stay and we're here for the long haul," said Dean Rizzo, Co-Director, who described how more than a half dozen of the city's smaller busi-

REGAL PURPLE

Amethyst, the birthstone for February, has long been highly regarded by both kings and clergy for its regal purple color. As if its purple hue were not enough to draw attention to it, amethyst is also strongly "dichroic," which means that it has the capacity to show two shades of the same color depending on the axis along which the stone is viewed. In the case of amethyst, a bluish or purplish tinge will appear when the viewing angle is changed. The gemstone's purple hue has also inspired symbolism. Popular folklore has it that the stone possesses a supposed ability to prevent drunkenness. The ancient Greeks believed that the purple gemstone amethyst protected them from the intoxicating effects of alcohol.

Because royalty has always adored the color purple, February's birthstone abounds in ornaments of the ancient Greeks and Egyptians as well as in the British Crown Jewels. And St. Valentine is said to have worn an amethyst engraved with the figure of a tiny Cupid, making romance a "must" at least once a year. Amethyst is also a wise jewelry choice because fine quality gems are available at relatively low prices. Let us help accessorize your wardrobe with rich, regal amethyst jewelry from 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center, or choose a Valentine's gift for your someone special. PH: 617-773-3636.

Council Vote Unanimous For 5-Year Term

Mary Ann Morris Appointed To QHA

City Council Monday unanimously approved the five-year appointment of Mary Ann Morris as the tenant representative to the Quincy Housing Authority Board as of Feb. 1.

Mayor Thomas Koch named Morris for the post and the council's vote confirmed that appointment.

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci nominated Morris. "She is the kind of unsung hero in our community that every day, through her actions, makes our city a better place and expects nothing in return. She simply does it because she cares."

Morris has lived in the QHA's Drohan Apartments on Copeland Street for 19 years and served as either treasurer or president of the resident's council for 12 of those years, according to Palmucci who concluded, "She's been a tireless advocate for residents...."

The new appointee replaces Jean Kennedy who was praised by Councillor Joseph Finn. Kennedy served on the board for the past decade.

Koch Given OK To Refinance QHS Project

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday the City won permission from state authorities to re-finance payments on the $126 million new high school project in a move officials believe will ease a previously anticipated spike in debt payments on the project.

Financing was set to come due over the course of the next several years, which would have required multi-million dollar increases in annual debt payments.

The refinancing, approved in part because of the city's stable financial condition, will extend the financing plan for the high school from 20 to 30 years under the plan approved by state authorities, Koch said.

With payments spread over a longer period, the spikes in debt payments over the course of the next several years will be eased, officials said.

"We are continuously looking for ways to work through these historic times, and a 30-year mortgage for this project makes a lot of sense," Koch said. "We worked very hard to save money and cut costs on the project since taking office, and this is one more step toward making it as efficient as possible."

The city is responsible for $54 million of the $126 million cost of the project, with the Massachusetts School Building Authority reimbursing the city for the remainder.

The city also received a favorable interest rate on a short-term borrowing package for previously approved projects that will help further ease the city's debt payments, Koch said.

"The positive financial news comes as the city is beginning its plans to build the long-awaited new Central Middle School.

"Everything we do now to improve our financial condition will help us as we move forward on Central," Koch said.

Meeting Tonight To Discuss NQHS Yearbook Delay

North Quincy High parents will be looking for answers at Thursday night's PAC meeting as to why yearbooks won't be available until the fall.

The meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. in the Trophy Room.

"Historically we usually get them in the summer and they have a cookout before college," said Kathy McCluskey. "They're going to be in college and not care about the yearbook in the fall. We've never had it that late. The parents are really upset."

Jostens Inc., whose corporate headquarters are in Minneapolis, MN, is the company NQHS secured to put the yearbooks together. Some families spent upwards of $122 for a single yearbook.

A spokesperson from Jostens said it is up to school officials to let the company know when they want the yearbooks delivered.

Finn Seeks Solar Power At Sea Street Crosswalk

Councillor Joseph Finn described the dangers for pedestrians on Sea Street where at least one pedestrian suffered a fatality in recent months and suggested solar power may be a useful tool.

Finn who teamed with Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest seeks a pilot program for solar-powered pedestrian signals on Sea Street.

In his resolution, Finn said the signal would allow feasibility study to determine the cost, and effectiveness of such technology. Numerous solar power projects have received federal, state and private funding grants in the past year and the city may partner and qualify for such strategies, according to Finn and Laforest.

JOE FINN

Currently, the city does have several solar-powered signs near the Sterling Middle School, according to Traffic Engineer Jack Gillon.

Gillon said one sign was installed in August 2009 at a cost of $4,500 because the city provided the labor.

"Two signs would have cost about $9,500 and if we had to replace the two-way installation, the cost would have been $10,000.

"We are now looking into an alternative sign be we are told the alternative would also cost about $9,500 with a passive actuation system, a system that turns flashing lights on when pedestrians are present.

Gillon supplied data describing how these signals work, "When the sun is up, the solar panel located at the top of the sign charges the batteries through a solar charger. Sunlight strikes the solar array panel on top of the traffic signal post

"The electricity is stored in batteries so the signal can operate on cloudy days and after dark during the winter months.

"The (Sterling) school sign itself is illuminated with many light-emitting diodes that are very bright to ensure diver visibility and this method requires approximately 90% less energy than incandescent light bulbs."

By LAURA GRIFFIN

THE SUN POWERS this traffic signal on Granite Street in front of the Sterling Middle School. The little screen at the top collects sun rays which power the batteries. Traffic Engineer Jack Gillon said such signals can cost from $4,500 to $10,000. Councillor Joseph Finn and Ward 1 Councillor Margaret LaForest want solar signals installed on dangerous crossings on Sea Street where one recent fatality was reported.

Council Wants College To Stay In The City, Return To Quincy Center

By LAURA GRIFFIN

To date, City Council has passed four resolutions aimed at bringing Quincy College back to Quincy Center and keeping the college in the city, but there has been no formal request to the Board of Governors, according to Chairman David Dennis.

Former Ward 1 Councillor Leo Kelly submitted two resolutions regarding Quincy College during his last terms and Councillor Daniel Raymondi, Ward 4, filed his second resolution on Jan. 25.

Kelly sought the guarantees after the Quincy College moved its main campus from the center to Newport Hall on Newport Avenue in 2007. He filed his second resolve on the subject at his last meeting in December.

To date, neither Kelly nor Raymondi's resolutions have been formally submitted to the college's Board of Governors, according to chairman David Dennis who said he's only heard about the issue second-hand.

If city officials really wants such guarantees, Dennis said that the condition be "mandated, make that part of the charter."

"We don't have the authority. How can we make a commitment?" Dennis said Monday, suggesting that city officials can mandate that the college be centered in Quincy by inserting that requirement in the college charter.

College officials have been working hard to cut the college's financial ties to the city and be established as an independent entity.

As part of that process, their attorneys prepared documents last spring that offered only a weak requirement that the college try to stay in Quincy.

"We do need to be a private institution," Dennis said. However, he added, "We are committed to Quincy. We've got no reason to consider leaving."

School Committeewoman Barbara Isola: Student Advocate

For Barbara Isola, education and advocacy go hand-in-hand.

From her first career choice as a nurse to her decision to go to law school and become an assistant district attorney in Plymouth County, Isola knows the importance of education. But it's her role as a parent that's made her keenly aware of the value of a quality public school system.

Ask about her goals as an elected member of the Quincy School Committee, she responds, "I hope to advocate for students throughout our system by using all of my experiences I have had as a parent, coupled with the knowledge I am gaining as a member of the Committee and put forth or support ideas which will enrich our public schools."

The path that brought her to Quincy is interesting and noteworthy because it offers insight to her core values.

The 52-year-old grew up in Queens, N.Y. and attended Hunter College in New York City where she received her nursing degree in 1979. She worked in the Newborn/Pediatric ICU at both Bellvue Hospital and NYU Hospital. In addition to patient care, she noted nurses are major advocates for their patients. Isola decided to continue her education by enrolling in law school.

She attended the University of San Francisco Law School while working as a nurse to support herself. She graduated in May, 1984 with a Juris Doctorate degree. While in law school, she met her husband of 26 years, Tim McAloon. After graduation, they decided to move east and Barbara took the Massachusetts Bar Exam.

"My first job out of law school was as an assistant D.A. in Plymouth County. I have remained there for 25 years," said Barbara, who is currently the chief of the Grand Jury.

In 1990, after exploring many communities, Barbara and Tim purchased a house in Quincy. "We fell in love with our adopted city and raised our children here," she says.

Both Robert, age 20, and Catherine, 18, attended Beechwood Knoll, Central Middle and North Quincy High School. Robert, a junior at Clemson University, is studying financial management. Catherine is a freshman at Fordham University - Lincoln Center.

Barbara says the Quincy Public Schools prepared them for higher education beyond her expectations as a parent.

"Each of my children had many options after high school because of the foundation they received at each level of their education. They are both academically and socially successful. As a parent, I am grateful for the commitment of the teachers, administrators and staff of our schools.

"In addition to academic excellence, an emphasis was placed on developing the entire person. This is invaluable," Barbara says.

Besides education, another passion of Barbara's is music. "At home, music is an integral part of our environment," she says. "While I enjoy all genres, jazz is my favorite. Miles Davis, Chet Baker and Oscar Peterson are among my favorite artists."

"We are so lucky to be in this area because there are many opportunities to see live performances of many contemporary acts."

Continuing with our profiles of newly elected city officials, here's a Question and Answer with School Committeewoman Barbara Isola.

Question: What prompted you to run for a seat on the School Committee?

Answer: I ran for School Committee because I believe that public schools are the cornerstone of our community. Through 14 years of active involvement as a parent volunteer while my children attended Quincy Public Schools, I came to understand the issues and challenges facing our school system. I served in positions of leadership in school PTO, PAC, and held office and was an active participant in Citywide Parents' Council. In addition, I was an active member of each School Improvement Council and assisted in writing the School Improvement Plans. When my children graduated from Quincy Public Schools, I wanted to stay involved. School Committee affords me the opportunity to serve this wonderful city and to participate in the policy making for all of our schools.

Question: What's the most important issue facing the school committee at this time?

Answer: The most important issue facing the school committee is to spend our budget wisely to maintain educational programs, a safe school environment and low class sizes. We must set priorities to allocate our funds in this tough fiscal environment.

Q: What other issues stand out in terms of your priorities this year?

A: I will encourage all of our students to reach their optimal potential in whatever course of study they participate. I will continue to support our teachers by supporting meaningful professional development opportunities.

Q: Are there any changes in curriculum and/or policies that you like implemented? If so, what and why?

A: I am learning about the curriculum and specific policies and programs which are in place at every level of QPS by meeting with the Superintendent and his leadership team. I believe when a new job is begun, it is important to gather the requisite knowledge before forging ahead with change. I have been working hard to educate myself by reading through curriculum documents, program descriptions and by asking questions of the experts employed by our system. I am doing this so I will be ready to tackle the job in an intelligent and informed way.

Q: It appears plans are moving ahead to construct a new Central Middle School on the site of the former Winfield House on Hancock Street in Wollaston. Do you support this site?

A: I support the construction of Central Middle School in the approved site because it will serve the students who are districted to attend and it is easily accessible to students who attend citywide programs. It is critical that the school be situated on the site in such a way to ensure a safe traffic pattern for student, staff and the public. Improvements to traffic patterns around the site must be a top priority.

Q: What other school building needs do you think should be addressed in the near future?

A: Sterling Middle School must be a priority. There is an extensive list of projects that must be completed at that site. A comprehensive building maintenance schedule should be developed and followed with regard to each of our schools. Also, we must continue to seek solutions to the traffic issues at NQHS.

Q: Are there any changes in the format of school committee members that you want implemented?

A: I believe the public forum should be moved to the top of the agenda to allow the public a more convenient and predictable time that they can expect to speak to express their concerns to the committee.

Q: In the event there is a vacancy in administrative positions (i.e. superintendent, school principals) do you support hiring from within the Quincy school system or searching beyond?

A: The best and most qualified candidate should be hired for each posted position in the system. We have a large talent pool within the system and those within the system should have the opportunity to advance their careers within QPS. Having said that, each vacancy needs to be examined individually and I would have an open mind as to each candidate who applied.

Q: Do you support charter schools in Quincy?

A: Charter Schools were developed to provide an alternative to parents and students in under performing districts. Quincy is not such a district. I do not support Charter Schools in Quincy because we serve our population well though all of our diverse programs.

Q: What sets Quincy apart from other area school districts?

A: Quincy is a rich and diverse system that supports various learning styles. We have involved parents who want to be partners in their children's education, complemented with talented and dedicated teachers who are committed to teaching our students and recognizing individuality. Another asset is an experienced and dedicated Leadership team who support innovation and creativity. Our city government and community recognizes the importance of public education to the entire city.

Q: What will be the most challenging financial decision in terms of the school budget that you think you'll have to make next fiscal year?

A: If there is a tight budget this year, any decision will be challenging. My goal is to set priorities to maintain a safe and excellent learning environment across the system.

Q: What do you hope to accomplish during the next four years of your school committee term?

A: Over the next four years, I will use my unique skills to contribute to the QPS and help ensure that our students receive the best education for their future. I hope that over the next 4 years, I will be known as an advocate for our students and a champion of our educational system.

IT'S BEEN WIDELY suggested that independent voters catapulted Senator-elect Scott Brown to victory in Quincy and state-wide in the special U.S. Senate election Jan. 19.

But a closer analysis of who voted here in that election - broken down by party - seems to indicate a significant number of Democrats crossed party lines to support the Republican Brown.

In Quincy, Brown defeated Coakley by 53.29 percent to 45.51 percent. They polled 15,607 and 13,330 votes respectively. (Libertarian candidate Joseph L. Kennedy received 325 votes. There were another 26 write-ins and 76 blanks.)

If you gave Brown every Republican vote and every unenrolled vote in Quincy, it would not equal his Quincy vote total. And if you gave Martha Coakley every Democratic vote in Quincy, that number is still far below the number of Democrats who actually voted here.

Here's the breakdown:

Out of the 29,344 Quincy voters who went to the polls Jan. 19, Democrats were the largest group with 14,145 or 48 percent. In second was the number of unenrolled: 11,867 or 40 percent. Republicans were third with 3,213 or 11 percent.

Let's add the number of unenrolled and Republican voters and put them in Brown's column. That total is 15,080 which is 527 fewer votes than his Quincy total.

Let's give Coakley every Democrat vote which is 14,154. She polled 13,330 votes in Quincy which is 824 votes fewer than the total number of Democrats.

Of course, one can't assigned voters strictly by party.

But I think the message is clear: While Brown may have been the choice among the vast number of unenrolled voters, he still appealed across party lines to some voters who are registered Democrats. Precisely how many is unknown.

Perhaps the Democrats who voted for Brown can be called "Brown Democrats" similar to the term "Reagan Democrats." That term was coined to denote traditional Democratic voters who defected from their party to support Ronald Reagan in the 1980 and 1984 Presidential elections. The term has also been used to describe moderate Democrats who are more conservative than liberal on certain issues like national security and immigration. Maybe one can add national healthcare, too.

ONE OF THE other figures that I found a little peculiar from the Jan. 19 election was the number of blank ballots: 76 to be exact.

Especially in an election that only had one contest on the ballot.

City Clerk Joseph Shea said those voters who opted to leave their ballots blank do so, in part, because they want to be recorded as voting in the election. But obviously they didn't have a preference among the candidates.

I guess you have to give these voters some credit in sticking to their principles and making the effort to get to the polls. At least they were not among the 26,639 voters who didn't bother to cast ballots Jan. 19.

Scenes From Yesterday

Quincy Point, Quincy, Mass.

THIS IS A July 1920 postcard view of the Town River in Quincy Point. This was a popular recreational area as small boats and canoes could be rented or launched from many places along the river. After the Southern Artery was built in the 1920s and the Town River was dredged in the 1930s for industrial development, the river's shoreline became less accessible. The material dredged up from the river bottom was pumped to fill in the Broad Meadows marshes. Even though World War II stopped the development, scenes like this became non-existent.

Now, the damage done to the Broad Meadows marshes by the dredging is to be reversed by the Army Corps of Engineers. And there is a proposed arrangement with Thayer Academy to improve public access to the river through the Souther Tide Mill property. Perhaps once again this will become a popular recreational area for Quincy residents. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

City Awarded $51,000 For Renewable Energy Projects

State Sen. Michael W. Morrissey and members of the Quincy Legislative delegation announce the City of Quincy has been awarded $51,000 for two renewable energy projects from the Massachusetts Renewable Energy Trust for a project that furthers the Commonwealth's clean energy goals.

"This project will provide $50,000 for the installation of a 4 - 6 kW solar photovoltaic system at the city's new Senior Center," Morrissey said.

"This installation will provide clean energy to the City of Quincy and will help educate residents about the science and benefits of renewable energy. The other $1,000 will be used to cover the costs of a wind feasibility study of Squaw Rock to determine the potential for wind development at the Squaw Rock site," Morrissey said.

"The funding comes as a result of efforts by citizens of Quincy to purchase clean energy through their electric utility bills, which generated matching funds from the Trust for use toward clean energy projects," said state Rep. Ron Mariano.

"Dozens of other communities are also using this matching funding for projects such as solar electric arrays, solar trash compactors, renewable energy educational materials, and other renewable energy projects and related materials," said state Rep. Stephen Tobin.

"These communities are green leaders; it's wonderful that they are implementing clean energy projects that their residents, businesses, and public officials can see in practice," said Trust Executive Director Carter Wall.

"The Trust is proud to support these communities, and we hope that these projects will help generate ideas for other renewable energy endeavors," state Rep. Bruce Ayers said.

"We commend these communities, and encourage all Massachusetts towns and cities to look into becoming Green Communities under the Green Communities Act of 2008," said Phil Giudice, commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Energy Resources (DOER). "With assistance from the state, communities can learn about and implement energy solutions, including energy efficiency measures and renewable energy projects."

For more information about clean energy assistance available for Massachusetts towns and cities, visit the DOER's Green Communities website: www.mass.gov/doer.

Broad Meadows Seen As College Site

By FRANK McCAULEY

Mayor James R. McIntyre sought the return of 117 acres of Broad Meadows land to the city as a site for the proposed $15 million South Shore Community College. Some 125 acres of Sea Street in Merrymount were sold to the old Quincy Electric Company for $80,000 in 1959. Mayor McIntyre said he would ask the present owner of Massachusetts Electric Company to consider returning the land to the city as a proposed college site.

He is writing to John J. Ahern, president of Mass Electric Co., to arrange a meeting to discuss the possibility. "This would be an ideal site," McIntyre said. "It would also save the city a considerable amount of money."

TUPPER PLANS TO RETIRE - at 88!

This will be Tupper Miller's last "one more year."

Tupper, who at a spry 87 is probably the oldest municipal employee in the nation, again this week, requested and was granted a "one more year" extension as Quincy Sewer Department foreman.

The request-and approval-has been an annual rite since 1952 when he reached what for most is the mandatory retirement age of 70. But Tupper, who will be 88 on April 14, likes to work. And because when he went to work for the city in 1937 he came under a special category excluding him from retirement law, he has been able to stay on the job-with City Council permission.

He got it again for the 18th consecutive year. Tupper confided to The Quincy Sun, "This will be my last year."

Tupper Miller was born in 1882 when Chester Arthur was president. He was the son of Quincy Mayor John J. Miller, who died in office in October 1914, the only mayor to do so.

Quincy's Juliana Rogantino Cast In 'The Ugly Duckling'

In Sync Center of the Arts will perform "The Ugly Duckling" Saturday, Feb. 6 at East Braintree Middle School.

The performance features In Sync ballet and contemporary students from Milton, Weymouth and Quincy who are students at its new Quincy location.

Among the performers is Juliana Rogantino of Quincy who is cast as The Mother Duck.

"The Ugly Duckling" follows the story of a young duckling and her journey to becoming a swan.

"It is so very important for young dancers to get the opportunity to perform classical ballet," said Teri Mangiaratti, director of In Sync Center of the Arts.

"Dance is so much more than what you see on MTV. There is technique, poise, grace and classical story telling that is important to expose our young dancers to," Mangiaratti added.

Margaret Crowley is the artistic director of "The Ugly Duckling." She has been the ballet instructor at In Sync the past five years.

"I am so proud of my students," she said. "They have been working very hard in class and are ready to enjoy the performance."

One-hour performances are scheduled for 3 and 6 p.m. on Feb. 6. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

In Sync Center of the Arts is located at 550 Adams St., Quincy. The over 7,000-square foot facility offers classes in all styles of dance, group music, guitar, voice, drums, piano, art, cooking, taekwondo and a Lego Club.

For more information on "The Ugly Duckling" performance, or the Center's February vacation and summer programs, call 617-328-5678.

Eastern Nazarene College To Present Eleemosynary Feb. 11-13

Eastern Nazarene College's Communication and Theatre Arts Department will present the play, Eleemosynary, at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 11-13 at the Cove Fine Arts Center, 23 East Elm Ave., Quincy.

Directed by ENC alumna Stefanie DeLeo, Eleemosynary - which means "dependent upon or supported by charity" - examines the family ties and tensions that exist among three generations of women: grandmother, daughter and granddaughter. Written by Lee Blessing, the play received the 1997 Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award for its insightful exploration of family relationships.

"Eleemosynary is an intergenerational play about three women coping with brilliance, eccentricity, the question of normalcy and the universal desire to make a connection," DeLeo said. "I think this story will resonate with audiences, because our relationship with our parents so intimately influences who we are, whether it's the strength of that relationship or the lack of it."

Eleemosynary's focus on family dynamics particularly appealed to DeLeo, she said, because of her recent service abroad with the Peace Corps.

"I've been living in South Africa for two-and-a-half years, and I noticed that family units and structures are so differently orchestrated there for a variety of cultural and economic reasons," she said.

"I encountered many orphans who had never met their parents due to the HIV/AIDS epidemic, and yet the majority of those kids were still deeply influenced by their (family) relationship, even though it wasn't there in the flesh. So, the appeal for me of this play is how universal the themes are that run through the story line."

A 2004 ENC graduate, DeLeo received the Moss Hart Award (College Division) from the New England Theatre Conference for her senior directing project, The Diary of Anne Frank. She continued her studies at New York University, earning a Master's Degree in Educational Theatre. In addition to serving in the Peace Corps, she has worked as a teacher, director and playwright, with two of her plays being produced in New York.

Eastern Nazarene College's production of Eleemosynary stars ENC students Allison Tucker, Brittany Garofollo and Kayla Peterson. Due to the play's intimate "black box" staging, seating for Eleemosynary is limited to 100 attendees per performance.

Tickets are $7 and are available by calling the ENC box office at 617-745-3715.

NQHS Math Team Competes In Greater Boston Math League

The North Quincy High School math team recently hosted and competed in the Greater Boston Math League against five area schools.

North Quincy dominated the meet for their third consecutive win. The school's team, named Full Moon, tallied 35 points.

Westwood's A Team finished second, ahead of Brockton and Xaverian.

The top three scorers at the meet were all from North Quincy. Junior Ping Fung scored 13 points, senior Justin Li scored 9, and Samantha To scored 7 points.

The math team also competes in the Mandelbrot Competition, the American-Mathematics Competition and the Harvard/MIT Tournament.

Advisor Kenneth Panaro cites the team's "hard work and diligence" as the keys to its success.

"The team spent many hours and met each week to prepare. Their preparation has paid off and the team will continue to improve and excel," Panaro said.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Ann Marie's Chicken, White Vinegar Surprise

Do you think you've cooked chicken every which way? Well, I thought I did also, until I had dinner at my daughter Ann Marie and husband Davey's house and had the most delicious chicken ever. As soon as I walked in the house, I could smell the great aroma.

I've cooked chicken with various wines, lemon, and tomato sauce, but today's recipe is made with plain white vinegar, but when you taste it, it's not so plain after all, but tasty and different. It is also cooked without any kind of oil or butter.

CHICKEN WITH WHITE VINEGAR
8 chicken thighs (skinned)
1 cup white vinegar
2 garlic cloves
2 medium sized potatoes (cut up)
2 tablespoons Rosemary (dried or fresh)
Salt and pepper to taste

In a large skillet, place the chicken. Then add the vinegar, garlic, the potatoes, and Rosemary and cook covered for about an hour. Remove cover and cook on low for another five minutes or so. I hope you will enjoy this unique flavor.

Chocolate Frosted Chocolate Cake

If you love chocolate as many of us do, here is a great recipe for chocolate cake or cupcakes that would be apropos for Valentine's Day, with a pink or red colored frosting.

CHOCOLATE CAKE

½ cup unsalted butter
2 eggs
1 ½ cups sugar
2 ½ cups cake flour (I used Softasilk)
2 teaspoons baking powder
2 teaspoons baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
4 ounces of unsweetened chocolate (chopped)
2 teaspoons vanilla

Cream the butter and sugar together. Add the eggs and milk alternately with the dry ingredients and beat for two minutes. Add the vanilla and chocolate and beat just until blended

Bake in a 350-degree oven for 35-40 minutes in a greased cake pan.

FROSTING

½ cup unsalted butter
2 tablespoons milk
½ cup powdered sugar
2 ounces unsweetened chocolate (melted)
1 teaspoon vanilla
Red food coloring if desired for Valentines Day

Melt the butter and add all other ingredients. Mix until blended. Add more sugar if needed. I also used colored sprinkles.

Artist Exhibit At Crane Library

An exhibit featuring the work of Whitman artist Russell DuPont is on display in the Coletti Reading Room of the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy, through Feb. 28.

The show includes paintings in oil, watercolor, and pastel as well as woodblock prints, depicting a variety of subjects.

DuPont began many years ago as a photographer and eventually gravitated into painting and print-making and back again to photography. He studied painting at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts under Barney Rubenstein and Henry Schwartz.

His work has been exhibited in juried shows and solo and group exhibitions around the Boston and South Shore area and the Boston Public Library has purchased his prints for its permanent collections.

DuPont's photographs have appeared on the covers of the Boston Globe Magazine.

For more information, call 617-376-1301.

Impact Quincy Honors Janet Powell

JANET POWELL receives a plaque from Impact Quincy Director Alejandro Rivera in recognition of her years of continued service to Impact Quincy Coalition's Advisory Board. Powell, formerly of Quincy Public Schools, has served as a member of Impact Quincy Coalition's Advisory Board as well as Bay State Community Services' Board of Directors. The Coalition, in collaboration with the City of Quincy, is implementing a program to prevent fatal and non-fatal opioid overdoses in the community, and a program to reduce underage drinking. Among those offering congratulations is Arthur Keough (right), chairman of Impact Quincy.

ARTHUR KEOUGH, chairman of Impact Quincy, discusses the fatal and non-fatal opioid overdose initiative in Quincy. The Impact Quincy Coalition Advisory Board meets at Quincy City Hall quarterly to discuss current programs and future drug and alcohol prevention and education plans. For more information, contact Alejandro Rivera at (617) 471-8400 ext. 127.

Norwegian Film Screening Feb. 11 At Library

The Thomas Crane Public Library will screen the award-winning Norwegian language film "Troubled Water" Thursday, Feb. 11 at 7 p.m. at the main branch, 40 Washington St., Quincy Center.

Admission is free. The 2008 Norwegian film has English subtitles, and runs 120 minutes.

Although not subject to rating by the Motion Picture Association of America, the film is not recommended for ages under 17 without parental permission.

Broad Search For New Quincy College President

board agreed with that."

Dennis said Harris mentioned her retirement plans to him over a month ago.

"She's retiring. She wants to retire. She's happy about her retirement," said Dennis who then highlighted Harris' achievements.

"She's accomplished great things within the college. There wasn't a better person in that regard. She's a wonderful lady."

"She has brought stability to this college, credibility. She's honest and dedicated. She stands up for her people. She stands up for education."

According to college records, Quincy College enrollment increased from roughly 3900 in 2004 when Harris was appointed to between 4200 and 4500 this year.

In addition, the college developed new facilities at the Plymouth and Quincy campuses, increased student retention rates, expanded the full-time faculty, completed a 10-year accreditation review, and added advanced technologies and communications.

During those same years, the college's budget increased from $15.2 million to $19.4 million, according to college records. This year's unexpended funds, or surplus, stands at $7.5 million, according to city records.

In her formal statement, Harris said she believes this is "the very best time for me to retire, not only for the college," but so that "I can pursue some of my personal interests."

"I have been especially blessed to have been able to make a difference as president these last five years. I believe the college now sits on a very secure foundation with an active and dedicated board of governors, new modern facilities, very talented faculty, five-year strategic plan...and healthy finances

Search Committee

Dennis hopes to lay the groundwork for a search for Harris' replacement at the board's next meeting.

"I'm going to try to steer the board into a procedure that is ordinary and regular in the (education) industry," Dennis said Monday, adding that it is important to have as much information as possible on search methods.

Dennis, a CPA with offices in Quincy, noted that he and other board members are in fields with few ties to educational facilities so there is a lot to research as far as process and procedures.

"There's a lot of things that need to be done," Dennis said, noting the board must first assign a search committee and then charge that committee with specific criteria for their choice.

Dennis acknowledged several missteps at recent meetings when the board chose executive session.

"I don't think we should have gone into executive session," said Dennis who explained the two instances.

In the first instance, Dennis said no member of the press or the public was present when the chairs of the board's committees chose to discuss succession issues in executive session.

More recently, Dennis said board members were discussing a potential successor to Harris in executive session and relied on a ruling from the city solicitor's office.

While college officials and the board can list numerous accomplishments in the past five years, the goal of independence has been elusive.

Future Goals

Despite the college's financial stability, Quincy College remains a department of the City of Quincy as it has been since founding in 1958.

It remains one of a handful of municipal colleges throughout the country, noted Dennis.

Last year, accreditation officials have identified the city's control as a problem and gave the city 10 years to cut the ties.

In past years, Dennis, Harris and board members have worked hard to gain independence and that independence remains a major goal, according to Dennis.

Dennis would someday like to see a full four-year program at Quincy College.

Koch To Create Detailed Financial Report

"If anyone has any kind of question about the budget, it is our hope that this report will be able to answer those questions," Koch said.

The report will be available publicly, and will be posted on the city's website for residents to download.

Incoming Municipal Finance Director Nicholas Puleo said providing the report will be an important step to continue the administration's efforts to open the financial books and fully explain those issues to the public. As a former top staffer on Beacon Hill involved in the budget issues, Puleo said, "communication and coordination" will be major focus of his job.

"The mayor takes openness and accountability very seriously, and so do I," Puleo said. "People need to be confident that city money is being spent efficiently, and that means it is our responsibility to be open and very clear about the process."

In some ERs, this is the only face you'll see for hours.

The wait. It's something that many patients have gotten accustomed to when they visit an emergency room. But not our patients. At Milton Hospital, we've shortened wait times and improved emergency care processes. And that's why our patients have rated us in the top 2% nationwide in patient satisfaction* for the year 2009. An impressive number. And we've done a number of things to earn it. We handle minor emergencies more efficiently. Patients have been impressed with our bedside manner. And we're staffed with Harvard Medical Faculty Physicians through our Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center affiliation.

With our commitment to patient satisfaction, we're changing the face of ER care. Milton Hospital. Our quality shows. And shines.

Citywide Parents Council Meets Feb. 8

The Quincy Citywide Parents Council will be holding a citywide PTO meeting to be held on Feb. 8 at 7 p.m. at the Broadmeadows Middle School.

Superintendent Dr. Richard DeCristofaro and QEA Representative Paul Phillips will be the guest speakers. They will be there to discuss and answer all of the questions regarding the federal "Race To The Top" educational initiative.

New members are welcome to attend.

For questions and additional information, contact Kathy Bowes at 617-472-2246.

Meeting Planned Monday To Discuss Blight Issues

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro has scheduled a special Ordinance Committee Monday at 6:30 p.m. to discuss blighted properties citywide.

"There are a number of recalcitrant landlords," said Gutro who called the meeting after discussing instances of nuisances and neglect that plague both business and residential areas.

Gutro will invite the city's Building Inspector Jay Duca to address the meeting and explain the legal process for reporting offenders.

In addition, Gutro will invite property owners and their neighbors.

"I will invite the neighbors to (weigh) in," said Gutro who also plans to list the properties cited for blight.

"We need to act swiftly," said Gutro who called the special meeting after several councillors identified untenanted properties at last week's meeting.

"If a property devalues, so does the property next to it," said Maralin Manning, Director of Business Development, Quincy Chamber of Commerce.

"We need to act," said Gutro.

Palmucci Salutes Cops' 'Top Dog'

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci Monday commended one of the Quincy Police Department's very special investigators and rewarded him with a two to three-foot dog bone.

The bone is just the kind of treat that the city's top dog Deco, a two-year old German shepherd, will most enjoy, according to Palmucci who said a council commendation would likely be wasted.

Deco joined the Quincy Police Department in August 2003. Palmucci cited Deco's work, particularly in two break-ins in the Wollaston area where the store windows were smashed.

"Deco, a German Shepherd, and his handler, Officer David Cooper, responded to both break-ins at the Beale Street store." Said Palmucci as he recounted the investigation.

"On Monday, Deco tracked a scent from the damaged store all the way to the MBTA tunnel on Newport Avenue before losing the trail.

"On Wednesday, he did it again, tracking a scent from the broken glass at Beale Street News to the public housing building at 90 Clay St. Officers caught the suspect who is from Dorchester when he tried to make a run for it. He was carrying items linking him to the two Wednesday morning break-ins."

After Palmucci's presentation, councillors discussed plans to present commendations to a number of police officers and firefighters at a future date.

Quincy Credit Union Offers College Scholarships

Lydon Chapel for Funerals: Serving One Family at a Time

Lydon Chapel for Funerals has a long tradition of helping families honor their cherished loved ones. Lydon Chapel prides itself on serving just one family at a time, ensuring that their caring and professional staff provides the individual attention needed to create a truly personalized and memorable service.

As owner and director, Michelle Lydon continues a family tradition that began more than 60 years ago. A licensed civil celebrant, Lydon is available to officiate at your service, working with you to create a poignant tribute that celebrates your loved one's life in a special way.

"From the moment you enter Lydon Chapel, our staff is here to assist you through this difficult time in any way possible," said Lydon. "Because we work with just one family at a time, we're able to devote our full attention to handling the many details of your service, including music and scripture selection, transportation arrangements and notification of clergy and fraternal or civic organizations."

Lydon Chapel believes each family deserves an individualized service. "From a candlelight rose-petal ceremony to a professionally produced video presentation of your cherished photos, we are dedicated to providing your family with a truly moving and personalized service."

The history of Lydon Chapel for Funerals dates back to the 18th century. Originally built as a wedding present for a young woman by her father, the building later served as a birthing home, beginning the tradition of caring that has become the hallmark of Lydon Chapel.

"Our lovely waterfall has even become a local landmark," Lydon said, "with many residents specifically requesting that their final arrangements include a service 'at the funeral home with the waterfall.'"

LYDON CHAPEL for Funerals, 644 Hancock Street, Wollaston.

In addition to funeral arrangements, Lydon Chapel offers cremation packages for $1,599 as well as wedding services, including a popular "Drive-Thru" wedding service for just $75. For more information, call (617) 472-7423 or visit www.lydonchapel.funerals.com.

By demonstrating compliance with The Joint Commission's national standards for health care quality and safety, Quincy Medical Center has earned the Joint Commission's Gold Seal of Approval™.

The Joint Commission conducted an unannounced, on-site evaluation of Quincy Medical Center Jan. 12-15. The accreditation award recognizes QMC's dedication to complying with the Joint Commission's state-of-the-art standards on a continuous basis.

"Above all, the national standards are intended to stimulate continuous, systematic and organization-wide improvement in an organization's performance and the outcomes of care," said Mark Pelletier, RN, MS, executive director, Hospital Programs, Accreditation and Certification Services, The Joint Commission. "The community should be proud that Quincy Medical Center is focusing on the most challenging goal—to continuously raise quality and safety to higher levels."

"We sought accreditation for our organization because we want to demonstrate our commitment to patient safety and quality care," said Gary Gibbons, MD, QMC President and CEO. "We view obtaining Joint Commission accreditation as another step toward achieving and sustaining excellence."

Gibbons noted the surveyors were highly complimentary about how welcoming and gracious they found QMC.

"They spoke with some of our patients who could not say enough about the great care they received," Gibbons said. "The surveyors also found examples of best practices, which is extraordinary. All staff -- physicians, nurses, housekeepers, dietary aides, patient billers, medical records clerks, and so on -- contributed in some way to the results of this survey. Their commitment to excellence, to QMC, and to our patients and families resonated with the surveyors."

"The QMC team should be proud to work at Quincy Medical Center where this high level of commitment to quality and safety exists -- I know I am."

Founded in 1951, The Joint Commission seeks to continuously improve the safety and quality of care provided to the public through the provision of health care accreditation and related services that support performance improvement in health care organizations.

The Joint Commission evaluates and accredits more than 15,000 health care organizations and programs in the United States, including more than 8,000 hospitals and home care organizations, and more than 6,800 other health care organizations that provide long term care, assisted living, behavioral health care, laboratory and ambulatory care services.

The Joint Commission also accredits health plans, integrated delivery networks, and other managed care entities. In addition, The Joint Commission provides certification of disease-specific care programs, primary stroke centers, and health care staffing services. An independent, not-for-profit organization, The Joint Commission is the nation's oldest and largest standards-setting and accrediting body in health care.

Quincy Medical Center (www.quincymc.org) is a 196-bed acute care community-teaching hospital.

Quincy Community United Methodist Church Creating Health Kits For Haiti

Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston, invites local residents to join in creating Health Kits for Haiti.

The collection is being held during the month of February.

To create a Health Kit, put the following items in a one-gallon plastic zip-lock bag: 1 hand towel (15-inch by 25-inch up to 17-inch by 27-inch; no kitchen towels); 1 washcloth, 1 comb (large and sturdy, not pocket-sized); 1 nail file or fingernail clippers (no emery boards or toenail clippers); 1 bath sized bar of soap (3 ounces and up); 1 toothbrush (single brushes in original wrappers only - no child size); 6 adhesive plastic strip sterile band aids; a dollar bill to purchase toothpaste (the United Methodist Committee on Relief, UMCOR, is purchasing toothpaste in bulk which will be added to the Health Kits prior to shipping; this is to ensure that the toothpaste does not expire before it is sent.)

All items included in the Health Kits must be new.

It is very important that the Health Kits contain only the requested items, nothing more. Do not add any personal notes, money (except the dollar for toothpaste), or additional items; these things must be removed and will delay shipment.

Completed Health Kits may be dropped off at the church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston.

Call the church office at 617-773-3319 before dropping off health kits to make sure someone is there to receive them.

Insurance STRATEGIES
by Jim Sullivan

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

Commercial ventures include enough responsibilities on their own; business people shouldn't have to worry about financial losses due to circumstances beyond their control. Please call JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY at 617-328-8600 to schedule an insurance consultation. We work with you to ensure that in the event of interrupted services, you and your company are protected, that any financial losses are minimized, and that your operations continue as soon as possible. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.

Recent events point out that natural disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, and earthquakes are commonplace. While no one ever thinks that these catastrophic events are going to hit home, it is a business owner's job to prepare for disaster. Planning begins with establishing a cohesive insurance strategy and keeping a list of policies and the insurance agent's phone number in a safe, readily accessible place. It is also very important to prepare an inventory of business equipment (preferably in video form) and keep back-up computer records in a safe location away from the business property. Business owners should have a list of key suppliers, creditors, customers, and employees from which they can draw if business operations are interrupted.

NOTE: In case a disaster strikes a business property, owners should develop a financial plan that covers continuing payroll expenses and debt obligations.

Ward 3 Democrats To Caucus Feb. 13

Registered Democrats in Ward 3 will hold a caucus Saturday, Feb. 13 at noon at Granite Place, 125 Granite St., Quincy.

Democrats will elect nine delegates and three alternates to the 2009 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Friday, June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center in Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Ward 3. All ballots will be written and secret.

Those not elected as delegate and/or alternate, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority, and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, disability, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is prohibited.

Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, MA 02129 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, contact Ward 3 Democratic Chairman Michael Covais, 617-328-8735.

Hancock Park Rehabilitation, Nursing Center Supports Relief Efforts In Haiti, Employees At Home

Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group is donating $5,000 to the American Red Cross for Haitian relief efforts in the aftermath of the recent earthquake.

At Hancock Park Rehabilitation & Nursing Center, a Welch Healthcare skilled center in Quincy, prayer services and counseling sessions have been organized to support the more than 50 staff members who are from Haiti or have relatives still living there.

To date, Hancock Park has raised $1,000, in support of victims of the earthquake.

"We are doing everything we can to assist our employees who are from Haiti and we encourage others to support the Haitian people in their attempts to rebuild their lives," said Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group President Richard Welch.

Registered Republicans considering or interested in learning more about running for office are encouraged to attend.

Four Councillors Attend Mass. Municipal Conference

Four Quincy city councillors recently attended the 31st annual Massachusetts Municipal Association Meeting and Trade Show at the Hynes Convention Center.

City Council President Kevin Coughlin was joined by colleagues Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro and freshmen councillors Margaret Laforest of Ward 1 and Brian Palmucci of Ward 4.

The MMA annual meeting and trade show is the largest regular gathering of Massachusetts local government officials. The two-day event features educational workshops, nationally recognized speakers, awards programs, a large trade show, and an opportunity to network with municipal officials from across the state.

"As elected officials we face a commonality of challenges and a shared purpose of problem solving punctuated by the difficult economic environment," Coughlin said. "Whether it's learning about grant funding opportunities, water infrastructure funding options, the cost, benefits, and opportunities for renewable energy within a community or best practices in a host of other areas, this is an unsurpassed and rare educational opportunity."

"The added benefits, beyond the workshops, of networking with other local officials and sharing in their diversity of experience and wealth of knowledge and learning about new products and services at the trade show complete the picture of an invaluable event," Coughlin added.

Laforest and Palmucci participated in workshops on "Funding Strategies in Challenging Times, Strategies for Developing Healthy Communities, and Tapping into the Creative Economy."

"This was a great opportunity to see what types of programs and strategies other communities have successfully implemented," Palmucci said, adding "many of which could be brought to Quincy."

Laforest, who is chairwoman of the council's Environmental and Public Health Subcommittee, said she was impressed with Somerville Mayor Joseph Curtatone's efforts to create new programs to increase physical activity of citizens. "There are several programs that have little to no cost, that we could implement in Quincy to improve the health of residents," Laforest said.

Palmucci and Laforest said they plan to work together to bring some of the best ideas and techniques they learned at the MMA meeting to Quincy in the near future.

Quincy Republican City Committee Meets Feb. 9

The Quincy Republican City Committee will meet Tuesday, Feb. 9 in the second floor community room at Roche Brother Supermarket, 101 Falls Blvd., Quincy.

All registered Republicans and unenrolled residents are invited to attend.

In addition to hearing from local candidates running for office in the 2010 state and federal elections, the meeting will focus on the upcoming GOP state convention and efforts to recruit and support local Republicans running for statewide office.

Town Brook Video On Channel 8 Friday

Quincy Center: Past, Present and Future, a video providing background about Town Brook and its current situation within the culvert, will be shown Friday, Feb. 5 at 8 p.m. on Quincy Access TV Channel 8.

Quincy's Town Brook played a key role in determining where Quincy Center was established in the 1630s. As a water source and food provider in the form of smelt for fish, Town Brook was essential in supporting the settlers of Quincy.

Town Brook begins in the Blue Hills and flows toward Quincy Center where it plunges into darkness under Ross Garage, Hancock Street and Hancock Parking Lot, and resurfaces towards its final destination at South-Tide Mill.

In the interest of creating a healthier smelt breeding habitat and a serene green space with the new Quincy Center, the Quincy Environmental Network is seeking to day-light (uncover) the portion of Town Brook which is currently underground in a culvert.

QEN is working with the Mayor's Office and Street Works, the redevelopment company planning to renovate downtown Quincy.

New Quincy Chamber Of Commerce Launched

Quincy 2000, Discover Quincy Merge

Business owners, state and city officials and Quincy residents came out in force to celebrate the launch of the new Quincy Chamber of Commerce.

The event, which was held at the Boston Marriott Quincy and attracted over 300 people, was the official kick-off of the new organization that is a partnership between Quincy 2000 Collaborative and Discover Quincy.

The creation of the Quincy Chamber of Commerce did not happen overnight. It has been an evolution over the years through several strategic partnerships and alliances, beginning with the transition of the Wollaston Business Association, North Quincy Business Association, Quincy Point Business and Professional Association and this past summer's merging of the Quincy Business Association within the economic umbrella of Quincy 2000 Collaborative. Throughout this period, a strong working relationship with Discover Quincy was established and the time was right to partner the organizations.

"It is Quincy's time to have its own chamber of commerce," said Ed Keohane, Chairman of the Quincy Chamber. "It makes sense to channel all of our efforts and energies under one name to provide better services and programs to the merchants and tourists. It's important to have everyone working in unison, with one collective voice, as we embark on the exciting downtown redevelopment initiative put forward by the City of Quincy's administration."

The feedback from the Quincy Chamber's current members has been extremely positive. "It was so great to feel the energy and enthusiasm in the room that evening," said Mark Carey, Co-Director of the Quincy Chamber. "Based on the sheer number of people in attendance, it is clear that this is a welcome change not only for the business community but also for the thousands of visitors who come to the City of Quincy every year."

The Quincy Chamber's new logo, created by Jack-rabbit Design, was also unveiled at the event. Along with the tagline "Connect. Explore. Grow.", the logo ties together three areas that the organization represents within the City of Quincy: the business community, the historical and tourism aspect, and the recreational aspect of the City.

The Quincy Chamber staff is represented by Dean Rizzo and Mark Carey as co-directors, Maralin Manning as director of Business Development and Donna Mavromates as director of Marketing.

Serving on the executive committee are Ed Keohane - chairman; Michael McGurl

- first vice chairman, Sean Galvin, second vice chairman; Dolly DiPesa, secretary; David Cesario, executive at-large; and Edward Fleming, executive at-large.

building, a sailboat, Old

City Hall and their mission statement, "Connect. Explore. Grow."

One important reason that the Chamber of Commerce is so important now, is the planned redevelopment of Quincy Center, according to Monday's speakers.

"It's critical for us to be involved now," said Rizzo, adding that the group will help facilitate the changes ahead and have answers for the business community through general meetings or individual meetings.

"We're willing," Rizzo said, adding, "We're willing to walk the streets."

"We want to be a resource for each of you," said Carey who also described the importance of tourism and current movie projects in the city.

Carey said tourism numbers stayed level last year and that was important in a year when tourism in most other areas dropped significantly.

The chamber's work is especially important now, according to Councillor Doug Gutro, Ward 5, who described some of the fears of small business in his ward which includes Quincy Center.

Some of these small businesses have weathered the economic storm but are now fearful they'll be lost in the redevelopment plan, according to Gutro who said, "There's still some trepidation."

Gutro asked that Rizzo and Carey co-sponsor workshops and panels to help existing tenant navigate through the change while Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest suggested more regional partnerships.

Carey and Rizzo described existing instances of regional plans and sharing, such as work on the Cultural Coast and efforts to align the city with projects from Salem to Cape Cod.

City Council President Kevin Coughlin outlined the importance of appearances in business zones and the city's gateways, while Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymondi described a blighted property on Hancock Street that burned three years ago and has never been remedied.

Maralin Manning, Director of Business Development, joined Raymondi in denouncing the property, saying the building has to be torn down or rehabilitated, "The city has to make it happen."

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee suggested the Chamber of Commerce target those businesses that have left or are leaving the city, help find new locations within the city or find out why they're leaving.

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci cited a specific example of the chamber aiding a business with "micro-financing."

"The efforts by the chamber for them have made all the difference," said Palmucci.

Donna Mavromates is Director of Marketing for the new groups and Ed Keohane is chairman.

For information on chamber programs, call 617-847-1454.

Something Special For Your Valentine

A Healthier Heart For Valentine's Day

It is no coincidence that Valentine's Day and American Heart Month both fall during the month of February. This February celebrate both by learning ways to keep your heart healthy, and share some heart-healthy gifts with the one you love.

Heart disease is the leading cause of death in the US, affecting both men and women of varying ages. Lifestyle, genetics, environment, and a number of other factors can increase a person's risk for developing cardiovascular problems. JoAnne Foody, MD, director of the Cardiovascular Wellness Center at Brigham and Women's Hospital (BWH), provides tips for a few aspects of life that you can take control of and change for the benefit of your heart.

Dr. Foody highlights key steps you may take to improve your heart health, as well as some possible heart-healthy gift ideas for your valentine:

Take Stress Seriously. Perhaps one of the most common health risks, stress is often underestimated and overlooked when making healthy changes. Seek out a tactic you can use to successfully reduce stress. For some, an exercise routine can serve as a stress reliever, and others may turn to relaxing with a book or taking a bath. Also, try to talk to friends and loved ones about the positive points of your day, instead of dwelling only on what went wrong.

Gift Ideas: Couples massage; gift certificate for yoga or meditation classes; basket of candles and bath stuff.

Make exercise an enjoyable priority. The switch to an active lifestyle needs to be a permanent change, find a way to exercise that is of interest to you. Consider taking a dance class with your partner or playing a sport you enjoyed in the past. Strive for thirty minutes a day of consistent aerobic exercise, or sixty to ninety minutes daily if weight loss is the goal, and consult a doctor before beginning a new exercise routine.

Gift Ideas: Couples dance lessons; mountain bike or other piece of fun exercise equipment

Make this year the one you quit smoking. If you're a smoker, research your assistance options, like smoking cessation programs or medications that may help you curb the desire to smoke, and pick the tactic that works best for you. If a loved one smokes also, work together to kick the habit. For those who do not smoke, steer clear of smokers, as second hand smoke can be harmful as well.

Gift Idea: Smoking cessation classes

Commit to a balanced, natural diet. A healthy diet is abundant in fruits, vegetables and whole grains, and sparse in saturated fat, sodium, and sugars. Opt for cooking with fresh ingredients whenever possible, and experiment to find fresh and healthy meal ideas that you and your family will enjoy eating.

Gift Ideas: Gift certificate to a nutritionist; heart healthy cook book or cooking classe; subscription to a healthy cooking magazine

Lose that extra weight now. More important than your size or weight is your body mass index (BMI), which considers both weight and height to determine if a person is at a healthy weight, underweight, or overweight for their height. Determine your BMI and devise a diet and exercise plan that can both gradually bring you down to a healthy weight for your height, and one that you can stick to once the weight is shed.

Gift Ideas: Gym membership; exercise equipment; healthy cooking classes

Be prepared and proactive during your physical. Bring a list of questions and concerns to your next appointment with the doctor. Make sure that the doctor has your full, up-to-date medical record, including a list of all medications and supplements you are taking. Be sure that you know and understand your important numbers, like blood pressure (normal 120/80), fasting blood sugar (<100mg/dL), body mass index and cholesterol, including LDL (70-160 mg/dL), HDL (>50 mg/dL) and triglycerides (<150 mg/dL).

Gift Idea: A health journal to record key information, changes, and any questions to ask at the next doctor visit Discuss taking aspirin.

Aspirin can be a lifesaver for those with risk factors such as smoking, diabetes, and family history of stroke or heart disease. Talk to your doctor about your risk factors and the potential benefits of taking aspirin once a day.

Gift Idea: Decorative or customized pill box and a bottle of aspirin

Ask, do you snore in your sleep? Sleep apnea, a condition characterized by pauses in breathing during sleep, is most commonly associated with obesity. However, sleep apnea is a significant risk factor for high blood pressure, cardiovascular disease and arrhythmias. Anyone thought to be experiencing sleep apnea should talk to their doctor.

Gift Idea: Gift certificate to see a sleep specialist; anti snoring pillow or other sleep aids.

Rosy Tips For Valentine's Day

(NAPS) – Roses reign supreme for Valentine's Day. A well-known statement of love, for many, sending roses is the perfect way to say "I love you."

To make this loving gift a long-lasting one, follow these tips from Julie Mulligan, lifestyle expert from 1-800-FLOWERS.COM.

- Always use clean vases or containers.
- Fill the container about 3/4 full with warm water and floral food.
- Removes leaves that will be under the water while in the vase, as they will rot.

- Give each stem a fresh cut on an angle while holding the stem under water to prevent air from getting in the stem.

- Place the vase in a cool spot, away from heat.

- Change the water and flower food every three to four days and recut the stems.

From roses to tulips to orchids to lilies, there are flowers to please all the important people in your life this Valentine's Day, says Mulligan.

Something Special For Your Valentine

Jewelry Gift Ideas For Valentine's Day

Every year, Valentine's Day is looked at as one of the biggest gift-giving holidays of the year. Additionally, many use the holiday to drop down on one knee and pop the big question.

The following jewelry ideas will help you pick out the hottest jewelry this Valentine's Day:

• Engagement ring: If you're looking to propose to your significant other this Valentine's Day, look beyond the four Cs and seriously consider the setting. With an engagement diamond purchase, a premium is paid for a quality diamond, and you won't want to diminish that investment with a metal that won't complement the beauty and longevity of the stone. Platinum will hold your diamond more securely, and since it's naturally a white metal, it will maximize the diamond's sparkle. Designs that range from modern styles by Martin Flyer to vintage-inspired looks from Tacori can accommodate all types of diamond cuts.

• Gifts for him: One of the most popular Valentine's Day gifts for men-stylish watches from companies like Frank Muller, Vacheron Constantin and Jacob & Co.-pair masculinity with durability in Platinum looks that are perfect for dressing up or down. If you're looking for a different approach. Platinum cuff links also make a good choice for that businessman with a sense of panache.

• Platinum pendants: From the runway to Hollywood's A-list, it's all about layering this season. Look to layering Platinum pendants in oval, heart and square shapes for a distinct flair this year.

Ten Ways To Be Your Own Valentine

Whether you're single or in a relationship, Feb. 14 can be an opportunity to renew your commitment to a healthy lifestyle and enhance your well-being.

Chocolates and sweets may abound, but this Valentine's Day, incorporate the following ten tips from TOPS Club, Inc. (Take Off Pounds Sensibly), the nonprofit weight-loss support organization, for increased peace of mind and tranquility that lasts well beyond the holiday. You may find yourself with a fuller heart and without a wider waistline.

10. Realize how great it is that you are one of a kind. Appreciate your voice, vision, and uniqueness.

9. Write down your many talents and qualities that you like about yourself. They can be as grand as flying an airplane or as simple as frequently leaving a tip at your local coffee shop. Continue being aware, and add to this list for a regular boost of self-esteem.

8. Get enough rest. According to a 2009 report in the "Archives of Internal Medicine," people who sleep less than seven hours per night appear about three times as likely to develop respiratory illnesses as those who sleep eight hours or more. In addition to improving judgment, problem-solving, and creativity, a well-rested mind and body will have increased energy levels, making it easier to commit to an exercise and healthy eating program.

7. Indulge in a (non-food) treat. Perhaps you always focus on the needs of others without ever doing anything nice for yourself. Buy a bouquet of flowers to brighten up your home or pamper your feet with a rejuvenating pedicure. Valentine's Day is the perfect occasion to treat yourself well.

6. Take time to write down and examine your goals. You may surprise yourself, as expressing your goals specifically on paper can be freeing and open up possibilities you might never have considered. Many of them might already be within your grasp.

5. Remember the special people in your life. Feb. 14 doesn't have to focus on the love you share with your significant other. Consider family members, friends, and mentors who make your life meaningful the rest of the year. Send a card to let them know how much you care or spend an afternoon just catching up, to leave both of you feeling treasured.

4. Try something new. Give yourself permission to take risks by exploring a new hobby, tackling that home improvement project, or training for a race. Don't let fear or excuses hold you back from your best self.

3. Create a food and exercise/activity plan tailored just for you. There's no need to hire a trainer or sign up for a pricey gym. Peruse healthy lifestyle magazines for workout tips, meal plans, and delicious, low-calorie recipes. Visit the local library or surf the Web for free materials and advice, as well.

2. Count your blessings. Think about what you are thankful for, and record them in a journal each night. The habit of looking on the bright side of each day and being grateful helps create an upbeat attitude and can add a sweet touch to life.

1. Relax, play, and enjoy life - without guilt. Just as a car's battery won't work unendingly without being recharged, remember that everyone needs to give themselves a break occasionally. Stop expecting the impossible from yourself and simply do the best you can with each day.

TOPS Club Inc. (Take Off Pounds Sensibly), the original, nonprofit weight-loss education and support organization, was established more than 62 years ago to champion weight-loss support and success. Found-ded and headquartered in Milwaukee, Wis., TOPS promotes successful weight management with a philosophy that combines healthy eating, regular exercise, wellness education, and support from others at weekly chapter meetings. TOPS has about 170,000 members in nearly 10,000 chapters throughout the United States and Canada, and several chapters in Europe.

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, Jan. 23, at approximately 7:30 p.m., Officer David Zupkofska was dispatched to Yardarm Lane to investigate a report of a stolen black Ford Explorer. The caller said that the vehicle she borrowed from a friend was just stolen.

The officer positioned himself near the Adams Shore Library in hopes of spotting the vehicle. After monitoring traffic for a few minutes to no avail, Officer Zupkofska met with the caller at her residence to gather more information.

The caller said that she parked the vehicle at her friend's apartment and after about twenty minutes, she noticed that the vehicle was gone. She held up a set of keys and said that she recalled locking the vehicle. Officer Zupkofska noted that the caller/victim appeared to be under the influence of narcotics, due to her slowed, monotone speech, however, she denied ever using drugs.

The officer went out to his cruiser, conducted a warrant check on the caller and discovered 2 default warrants for her arrest, one being for "Being present where heroin is kept." When the officer went back to the apartment, he found two males inside. One of the males was on the phone attempting to contact the owner of the vehicle.

Officer Zupkofska told the caller that she was under arrest for outstanding warrants. The two males walked into the living room area and could be overheard saying, "She's going. She has warrants. We'll take the stuff when the cop leaves."

The officer instructed the two males to come back into the kitchen. Officer Matt Patten arrived on scene and watched the two males as Officer Zupkofska asked the caller/suspect #1 what happened to her purse that she was holding when he first observed her. She denied having a purse, stating that it was in the stolen SUV.

A quick scan of the living room area revealed that her purse was on the couch. When asked if it was hers, suspect #1 stated it was. Officer Zupkofska picked up the pocketbook and under it was a CVS plastic bag. Sticking out of the bag was three syringes and a spoon with discolored cotton balls stuck to it. Based on his training and experience, Officer Zupkofska knew that heroin users use spoons and cotton to help shoot up. Inside suspect #1's wallet was a folded piece of white paper containing a white powder believed to be heroin.

Warrant checks were conducted on the two males. Suspect #2, a 21 year old Boston resident, had a default warrant for "Possession of Class A Drug." He and the other male, a 43 year old Quincy resident, were additionally charged with "Knowingly being present where heroin was kept."

Suspect #1, a 25 year old Weymouth resident, already under arrest for the warrant, was subsequently charged with "Possession of Class A Drug." Once at the station, suspect #1's purse was searched and five more syringes, 2 cellophane wrappers, a loose piece of cotton, a q-tip and another folded piece of paper in her wallet with a brownish colored powder were discovered.

So, what happened to the stolen SUV? Soon after the arrests were made, the owner called to let the Police know that he came over to the apartment and took the vehicle himself. The stolen vehicle report was then cancelled.

Nice Work!

Floor Refinishing Fire Safety Initiative

Here's another initiative from the State Fire Marshal's Office which takes effect June 1, 2010. It pertains to floor finishing operations, especially those where flammable liquids are involved.

In residential occupancies with three or fewer units where floor finishing will take place, a letter must be forwarded to the local fire department in advance, giving the workers name, address, and the date and time the work will be performed. A permit is required for every other type of occupancy or those residential occupancies with 4 or more units.

This appears to be an effort from the State Fire Marshal to afford the local fire departments the opportunity to issue floor-finishing contractors a list of precautions

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

applicable to flammable floor applications where fire department inspections are not required.

The fumes from flammable lacquers, resins and urethanes, which contractors frequently apply to newly sanded floors, have the potential of igniting explosively if suspended vapor is present within its explosive limits and an ignition source is present. This frequently happens. The other concern being the improper disposal of oily rags from such operations which can spontaneously ignite if not properly disposed of and allowed to dry. Too often rags are discarded with sawdust from sanding, mixing a potential ignition source with an easily ignitable material.

This new regulation is an effort to remind floor-finishing contractors of the potential ignition sources present within occupancies and the precautions that must be taken with them to alleviate the hazard of ignition. This includes but is not limited to the hazards of smoking, pilot lights and heating equipment and the potential hazards with arcing electrical equipment. Under certain conditions warning signs must be posted on all doors and entrances to a building or unit. While ventilation concerns with their potential health risk and explosive concerns are hilited as well.

If you are planning to have your floors refinished, and wish to read these precautions for yourself, kindly contact us at 617-376-1015, otherwise stop by the fire prevention office and we'll gladly give you a copy.

Be safe!

Conway's Carol Bulman South Shore Chamber Director

Carol Bulman, chief executive officer of Jack Conway, Realtor will continue her company's 54-year tradition of community involvement as a newly appointed director of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

"Conway Country and the South Shore are almost synonymous," said Chamber President and CEO Peter Forman.

"Jack was the 1977 chairman of our association and it's only fitting that the new Conway CEO serve on our board. Carol has an excellent background in financing and real estate, and that will be helpful as the South Shore looks toward a decade of high growth."

Bulman, who will serve on the South Shore Chamber's Board for a term of CAROL BULMAN three years, views her role as an opportunity to help her business and her community.

"I have the highest admiration for the association and all the good works it has done," said Bulman. "I believe there is strength in unity and when business people come together with a common goal, great things can happen. I'm honored to be a part of the process."

Community involvement is a prerequisite for all Conway real estate associates, according to the company's chairman, Jack Conway, who has always led by example. Since starting his business in 1956, Conway held leadership posts on numerous national, state, and local associations.

"I'm thrilled that Carol will represent our company on the South Shore Chamber's Board," said Conway. "It's a wonderful organization that has made a huge difference, not only for the business community, but for the people we serve."

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce is the second largest chamber in New England and the largest in Eastern Massachusetts. Headquartered in Quincy, it represents nearly 2,000 businesses south of Boston. Members of the group range from major international corporations to small local firms and sole proprietors.

The association's mission is to improve and bolster the business climate on the South Shore and to promote economic growth throughout the region.

Jack Conway Co. is celebrating its 54th anniversary as the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts.

Clearing an Ice Dam

Q: I try to keep my home's gutters clean, but I noticed an ice dam has formed at one corner of the roof gutter. Should I try to clear this dam in mid-winter? How can I safely do this? — Bill T., Springfield, Mass.

A: Whether to clear an ice dam in mid-winter, particularly in freezing conditions, is something of a judgment call. You'll need to evaluate by answering a few questions.

Is it safe? Is the ice dam the only icing problem occurring on the roof, or are there other ice issues (such as buildup on the shingles)? Is there also a lot of snow on the rooftop that could be dislodged when clearing the dam? Is the weather calm and clear?

Is it necessary? Is the ice dam causing structural damage to the roof or house, or just to the gutter system? Is water leaking into the house near the ice dam?

Will a temporary solution suffice, or is a complete repair or replacement of the damaged gutter necessary?

If the surrounding area is safe and the weather is good (above freezing, too, if possible), and you feel you absolutely have to get to that ice dam — say, the gutter looks like it's about to tear away from the roof — go ahead and tackle it. Be sure to have a helper along to steady the ladder (or hold the rope, if you're working from the rooftop).

The least destructive way to clear ice is to use hot water or a de-icing chemical to gradually melt away the dam, rather than chipping away at it with tools and possibly damaging the gutter or house structure. First try to create a drainage path for the water along the downward sloping side of the gutter system. You may need to clear ice from the top of the downspout as well to facilitate this. Pour the water or de-icer in the direction of the drainage path.

Once the ice dam is gone, clear away the debris that caused the dam, and make repairs to the gutter section, if necessary.

Again, it's more difficult, and often unsafe, to clear ice from the roof gutters in winter. If in your initial evaluation you find no compelling reason — like serious potential damage — to remove the dam, don't do it. Wait until spring and fix whatever caused the dam in the first place.

HOME TIP: Use caution when removing ice or snow from the edge of a sloped roof — snow or ice piled behind the edge could be released and fall on top of you.

Members of Quincy's Dungeon Training Center Young Wrestlers Participate in Local Tournament

Young members of the Dungeon Training Center, Quincy's local wrestling club, participated, on January 24, in a youth wrestling tournament at Pembroke High School. The tournament consisted of wrestlers from all over Eastern Massachusetts with medals awarded for the top-three finishers in each weight category.

The Dungeon wrestlers had trained two days a week for the past year for this event; for many of these wrestlers, it was their first-ever wrestling tournament.

"These little guys have worked very hard at improving their wrestling skill and given the fact that we took home as many medals as we did. I am nothing but proud of these kids," said Russell Lindsay, owner and coach of the Dungeon Training Center who was at the tournament along with the wrestlers' parents. "Every week they are showing up and going through their drills and making improvements where they need to be made. These kids have just gotten a taste of winning a match against someone other than their training partners at the Dungeon."

Local medalists included:

Eric Reyes and Declan Mayo; first-place winners;

Mario Ragusa and Aiden Moore; second-place winners, and Brandon Reyes, Luke Rogers, Danny Ryan, John Kelly, Peter Conneely and Andrew Conneely; third-place winners.

Ben Gaudiano, Corey Hales, Matthew Kelly, Eamon Mayo, Joey Pomella, Thomas Pomella and Matthew Ryan also showed great effort in the matches that they participated in at the tournament.

The Dungeon Training Center, located at 24 Broad Street, Quincy, holds youth clinics on Tuesday evening from 5:30-7 p.m. and Sunday afternoon from 1:30-3 p.m.

Advocate For Women's Athletics

Local Olympian Inducted Into MA Track Hall of Fame

By JOE REARDON

She was once nearly disqualified from a track meet for wearing her shorts too short. Mildred Wiley Dee simply shrugged. "I was always rolling my shorts up," Dee once said with a laugh in a 1992 article by Kimberly Campbell in "The Christian Science Monitor." "I wanted them out of my way. Look at what they wear nowadays."

Dee, a 1918 graduate of Quincy High, was inducted posthumously into the Massachusetts State Track Coaches Association's Hall of Fame Saturday at the Reggie Lewis Center. Her daughters Barbara O'Neil and Marilyn DeCoste accepted the award on her behalf.

Dee was the premier high jumper in the United States during her era. In 1927 she captured the event at the US National Indoor Championships with an American Record 4-9-3/8. A year later she won the US Outdoor Championships and went on take first at the Olympic Trials. Dee's finest moment came when she captured the bronze medal at the Amsterdam Games, clearing 5-1-7/16 in a jump-off with silver medalist Carolina Gissolf of Holland. She became the first female from Massachusetts to ever win an Olympic medal.

"The high jump has changed over the years," Dee once mused. "In my day, we did the scissors jump, and not this dive that they do today."

Dee was introduced to the high jump by her swim coach, who also happened to coach track. It was years earlier, however, where Dee first started jumping. She was training without even knowing it. When coming home from Wollaston Beach, there was a hedge near her house she would have to jump over.

The nine-day journey to Amsterdam on the steamship President Roosevelt offered a challenge in practicing the high jump because of the ship's constant up and down motion. Douglas MacArthur, the chairman of the U.S. Olympic Committee at the time, was also on board.

She remembered sailing up a canal upon arriving in Amsterdam and the sailors on a U.S. destroyer on the way out played "The Star Spangled Banner." Dee said it was very emotional and there were a lot of tears.

After retiring from track, Dee went on to be a strong advocate for women in athletics. She led health walks, taught Red Cross swimming and started a girls track team in Braintree in the 1950s. Dee was the secretary for the New England Chapter of the Olympics for several years.

Athleticism ran in the family. Her son, the late Bob Dee, was a defensive end for the Boston Patriots and is a member of the AFL Hall of Fame.

Quincy's Jake Kerin Named Rookie of the Week

Jake Kerin, a Quincy resident and a freshman at the University of Massachusetts-Boston, has been named the Little East Conference Rookie of the Week for his performance on the indoor track circuit.

The award marks the second time this season that Kerin has earned this honor, having also been named top rookie earlier in January.

The freshman has made the 800-meters his event this season, improving his time for the fourth consecutive race with a 2:02.23 mark to place 15th overall and second among Division III runners at the Reebok Boston Indoor Games hosted by Northeastern University at the Reggie Lewis Center on Jan. 29. The event was open to schools from the NCAA Divisions I, II, and III as well as community colleges.

A graduate of Boston College High School, Kerin has competed in the one-mile and the 800-meters for UMass-Boston this season.

His time of 4:51.68 in the one-mile run is the best of any Beacons' runner this season and was good for a tenth place showing among Div. III runners in the Harvard University Open on Dec. 14. His mark in the 800-meters at the Reebok Boston Indoor Games meet is also the top time this season for any UMass-Boston competitor in the event.

Girls Swimming/Diving Defeats Randolph

The Quincy/North Quincy girls' swimming/diving team defeated Randolph High School, 80-56, on Jan. 26 at the Lincoln Hancock Pool; in the process, the team's 200-yard freestyle relay team qualified for the Central/South Sectional Meet.

The relay contingent comprised of three captains: Danielle Urbanus, Hannah Flattery and Kendra Johnston, along with freshman Kat O'Connor swam a time of 1:57.22 to qualify for the Sectionals.

Johnston won a pair of events in addition to her relay effort, clocking 1:13.43 in the 100-yard butterfly and 2:30.28 in the 200-yard individual medley, the latter of which co-captain Hannah Flattery finished with the event's second-best time of 2:42.44. Flattery posted her own win in the 100-yard freestyle (1:03.21); Kat O'Connor snatched the meet's best 500-yard freestyle mark and recorded a 28.50 in the 50-yard freestyle meriting her top honors, followed by teammates Danielle Urbanus (28.81) and Hillary Wong (29.15), who accomplished the Q/NQ 1-2-3 sweep.

From the start of the meet, Q/NQ took control, placing one-two in the meet's first event, the 200-yard medley relay. In the butterfly leg, freshman Leslie David surpassed Randolph's swimmer to help Q/NQ secure the top-two places. In the very next event, the 200-yard freestyle, David (3:00.91) finished behind Q/NQ's Samantha Enbar-Salo who was victorious with a time of 2:45.19. David also came from behind on the final lap of the meet's 100-yard backstroke to finish second, clocking 1:27.03.

Boys' Swimming/Diving

The Quincy/North Quincy boys' swimming/diving team (1-8 overall) slipped to visiting Randolph High School, 77-60, at the Lincoln Hancock Pool on Jan. 26.

Q/NQ freshman Emmitt Harrow placed second in the 50-yard freestyle (28.50) and capitalized on the final lap of the 100-yard freestyle event, overcoming a deficit to take first with a time of 1:09.18.

Senior Dylan Roche paced the 100-yard backstroke field by swimming 1:32.22. The senior also finished third in the 200-yard freestyle (2:57.94).

Senior captain Raymond Cheung improved his 500-yard freestyle time by 15 seconds, earning him third in that race with a mark of 7:29.97.

Both teams swam/dove against Norwell High School on Tuesday at the Lincoln Hancock Pool.

TWO QUINCY YOUNGSTERS recently advanced to the Elks National "Hoop Shoot" state finals. Kayleen Lenihan, a sixth grade student at Sacred Heart School, will represent Quincy in the 10-11-year old girls division, and Colin Evans, a seventh grade student at Central Middle School, will represent Quincy in the 12-13-year old boys division.

Colin Evans & Kayleen Lenihan Moving On Quincy Residents Advance to "Hoop Shoot" State Finals

Two Quincy "Hoop Shoot" champions, from the Quincy Lodge of Elks Lodge #943, have advanced to the Elks National "Hoop Shoot" Free Throw state finals to be held this weekend in Maynard, Massachusetts.

Colin Evans won the 12-13-year old boys title and Kayleen Lenihan won the 10-11-year old girls title at the recently conducted Circle District Regional Championships that were held at Marshfield High School.

Evans and Lenihan are no strangers to the "Hoop Shoot" event, which is sponsored locally by the Quincy Lodge of Elks #943 and is supervised by the Quincy Recreation Department. Evans, a seventh grade student at Central Middle School, is a six-time city champion, which is considered a sweep of this event, which has six different age groups. Lenihan, a sixth grade student at Sacred Heart School has been crowned city champion in each of the four years that she has been eligible.

Both Evans and Lenihan have advanced to the state finals in previous years; this is the fourth trip for Evans and the third trip for Lenihan.

The Elks National "Hoop Shoot" Free Throw program is the largest non-commercial co-educational sports program in the United States with more than three million children, ages eight through 13 years of age, participating each winter. As youngsters win, they continue to advance through local, district, state and regional events to reach the National Finals. At each step of the event, the youngsters shoot 25 free throws to determine a winner; ties are broken with a five-shot playoff.

At this year's District Championship, which encompasses eight South Shore communities that have local Elks Lodges, other Quincy city champions also performed well. Ryan Mele, the Quincy 8-9-year old boys champion, finished in second-place. Mele is a third grade student at Merrymount School. Quinlan Evans finished in second-place in the 10-11-year old boys division; Evans is a sixth grade student at Central Middle School. Brigid McDermott finished in third-place in the 8-9-year old girls division. She is a fourth grade student at St. Agatha School in Milton.

Colin and Quinlan Evans are the sons of Mary and Bob Evans; Mr. Evans is the assistant basketball coach at North Quincy High School. Kayleen is the daughter of Joan and Edward Lenihan.

According to Welch, the Quincy Lodge of Elks #943 has sponsored this event, locally, for 25 years:

"This is a model program that connects kids and their families to a quality program that promotes hard work and sportsmanship. We are indebted as a community to the Elks for this opportunity. Our sincere thanks are extended to Exalted Ruler Dave Montani, 'Hoop Shoot' Chairman Ed Miller and the entire Elks membership."

The City of Quincy has had one "Hoop Shoot" participant, Erin Croke, advance to the National Championship during its years of participation in the event. Croke is now a teacher in the Quincy Public School system.

QRD Announces Women's Fitness Classes

The Quincy Recreation Department and Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, announced Tuesday that the QRD, in cooperation with the Mayor's Commission on Women will be conducting registration for two Women's Fitness classes, which will take place at the Fore River Clubhouse on Friday (Feb. 5).

Both programs will be held on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at 8:15 a.m. or at 9:15 a.m. Mrs. Karen Gaughan will instruct the classes.

Each class includes exercises to improve and strengthen flexibility, endurance and overall fitness; adaptations in the exercises allow each participant to work out at their own pace.

The cost of the ten-week program is $60. The sessions begin on Feb. 5 and will conclude on April 7. Registration is on a first-come-first-serve basis and will be taken at the first class. People who can not make this registration period may register weekdays at the QRD Main Office, One Merrymount Parkway, Quincy or online at www.QuincyRec.com.

THE QUINCY/NORTH QUINCY Swimming/Diving team, pictured here at the Lincoln Hancock Pool, has improved this winter under the direction of first-year head coach Bob McGillicuddy.

QHS Starts Week With Win

By SEAN BRENNAN

With a real shot at qualifying for the Division II South Sectional basketball tournament still on the table, the Quincy Presidents earned a clutch Patriot League Fisher Division victory Monday night over Pembroke High School. Final score: 61-47.

The Presidents (5-9 overall, 5-7 in league play) need to finish, either in second-place in their division, or with ten overall wins to qualify for postseason play. At the moment (Feb. 2), Quincy is sitting in a three-way tie with Pembroke (a team they have defeated twice) and Hanover (a team that they played Wednesday evening) for second-place in the Fisher Division. In the event of a tie, all the second-place teams would qualify.

"That was a big win over Pembroke," said QHS head coach David Parry on Tuesday. "We have really started to gain some confidence these last few games and even in the games that we have lost recently (by 10 points to Scituate, by 12 points to Duxbury and by one-point in overtime to Hingham) we have been very competitive.

"Right now, and especially against Pembroke, our inside game is working and so is our outside game. Our defense has also started to pick up. We still have a shot (at the postseason)."

Against Pembroke, Quincy's inside duo of juniors Kevin McDonagh (14 points) and Seth Pullum (14 points) carried the Presidents to victory. Senior Cedric Dybaud provided solid defense all game.

"We are playing well inside and our inside intensity has really picked up," added Parry. "Kevin McDonagh has been great. He can take it inside and he can also score from long range. But Seth and Luke McDonough have also been playing with confidence and that improvement has been noticeable.

"On defense, we held Pembroke to 16 first-half points. That was a big win, but we have another big division game against Hanover, followed by division games versus Randolph, Rockland and Middleborough before ending the season with two non-league games.

"We should probably know by next Thursday where we stand in regards to postseason play. A couple of early season losses, including one to Silver Lake (a 56-53 loss) could end up hurting us, but if we continue to improve and play with this intensity, we have a shot."

Quincy's next three games, after the Hanover showdown, are against Fisher Division opponents. This scenario presents the Presidents with an opportunity to grab a hold of that critical second-place position. On Feb. 5 the team will play Randolph HS (2-4 in league play), on Feb. 9 the Presidents will face a difficult challenge when they play at Rockland HS (Fisher Division leader with a 8-4 record) and on Feb. 11 Quincy will host Middleborough (1-11 in league play).

"The best option for us would be to get that second-place finish," said Parry. "Ten wins, which is our other option, could be tougher since we still have a game against Rockland and more than likely two difficult non-league games against tough opponents in the upcoming Vin Moscardelli Tournament to end the season."

'50 Days Of Daffodils' To Benefit American Cancer Society

This year, New England marks the official launch of Daffodil Days with "50 Days of Daffodils" – a public relations effort to publicly announce Feb. 1 through March 22 as the official period for daffodil ordering, awareness of daffodil products available this year, launch of the www.cancer/daffodils interactive website, volunteer recruitment and an opportunity to showcase how the Society is working locally to help cancer patients and their loved ones stay well, get well, find cures and fight back against cancer.

"We are excited by the hope and spirit that Daffodil Days brings to those who have supported the campaign year after year," says Kelli Barry, State Vice President of Development for the American Cancer Society. "This year, we are working toward expanding that reach into each New England community, alerting them to the opportunities to get involved and how even a $10 dollar donation can make a tremendous difference for neighbors and friends faced with a cancer diagnosis this year," she added.

Daffodil Days offers a bouquet of products:

- For a $10 gift, donors receive a bouquet of ten fresh daffodil blossoms.
- Three mini-daffodil bulbs in a soil filled pot are available for a $15 donation.
- A bouquet of ten daffodils and a Boyd's collectable stuffed bear for a $25 donation.

- Gift of Hope: daffodils are delivered to a cancer patient undergoing treatment. $25 and up.

- Bear Hugs for Hope: special edition, collectable bear is delivered to a child impacted by cancer. $25

Flower and product orders can be placed now through March 5 by calling the American Cancer Society at 1.800.ACS.2345 or making an online donation at www.cancer.org/daffodils.

Delivery coincides with the start of spring, the week of March 22.

According to the Society, this longstanding program, which historically coincides with the coming of spring, is expected to raise nearly 3 million dollars in New England to support the fight against cancer.

For more than 35 years, the American Cancer Society has, through its Daffodil Days program, been sharing hope for a world with less cancer and more birthdays by really helping people get well, stay well, find cures and fight back against cancer. Although Daffodil Days involves offering daffodils to donors every spring in appreciation for their contributions, it is about more than just giving beautiful flowers; it is an opportunity to share hope for a world free of cancer.

Volunteer opportunities abound -- from school children to corporate CEOs – to assist in taking daffodil orders, sorting and packing the bouquets for order fulfillment and/or delivering daffodils in your community during the week of March 22.

Supporting Daffodil Days as a volunteer or a donor provides the knowledge that you are helping fight cancer, and what a poignant thought that is as we welcome spring.

Dollars raised through Daffodil Days enable the Society to offer free programs and services that help people fight cancer with courage and optimism, while it provides day-to-day help, emotional support, and 24-hour information to help ease the cancer experience.

Additionally, daffodil contributions provide the Society with much-needed dollars to fund groundbreaking cancer research, educate people about the importance of cancer prevention and early detection and advocate for meaningful public health policies that benefit the community.

For more information about Daffodil Days, to request flowers, or to get involved with the program, contact the American Cancer Society at 1.800.ACS.2345 or www.cancer.org/daffodils.

Milton Hospital, a clinical affiliate of Beth Israel Deaconess providing community based healthcare, announces Michael Brady has been appointed chairman of the board.

Brady, who brings more than 28 years of financial experience working for Merrill Lynch will be a valuable asset as the hospital responds to healthcare reform, hospital officials said.

"I am very honored and excited to accept the responsibilities of chairman," said Brady. "Former Chairman Rick Ward accomplished much during the 18 years he served Milton Hospital and I look forward to continuing this momentum into 2010."

Prior to being appointed chairman, Brady served on Milton Hospital's finance committee for six years and spent another year and a half as treasurer.

With tremendous changes underway in healthcare economics and delivery, Brady expressed confidence in facing industry challenges. "Our job is to continue to provide the highest quality care and service with the most qualified doctors," said Brady.

Additional goals for the board under Brady's leadership will be further recruitment of high-level primary care physicians and surgical subspecialists.

"Mike's commitment to Milton Hospital is steadfast," said Milton Hospital President Joe Morrissey. "His financial acumen was essential over the last few years, and his leadership as Finance Committee Chair has helped the hospital to begin to improve its financial position."

Brady, a Braintree native, earned a business degree from Stonehill College in Easton, MA and an MBA from Boston College. He is also a Chartered Financial Analyst. Brady is currently a Financial Advisor with Merrill Lynch Global Wealth

Sleep Position and Heartburn

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have had acid reflux for quite some time, and doctors have prescribed different medicines, the last being omeprazole. Medicines were not relieving the burning pain. The best advice came from an online message board that said to "sleep on your left side." Figuring it wouldn't hurt to try this method, I began sleeping on my left side. Once my body learned to stay in that position, the pain does not bother me now at all at night. Why don't doctors share such simple methods for relief rather than prescribing medications? Please pass this information on to others. — N.S.

ANSWER: When it works, a change in sleeping position is a simple way to deal with a big problem. It doesn't work for everyone. In fact, it works for only a few, but it's still valuable advice and is something that should be suggested more often. A change in sleeping position also can work for snoring. Sleeping on the side, right or left, can open up the throat and stop snoring. Redundant throat tissue, like a reed in a wind instrument, lies behind snoring. Sewing a pocket in the back of the pajamas and putting either a tennis ball or a marble in it keeps snorers off their backs.

Other self-help tips for GERD (gastroesophageal reflux disease, heartburn or acid indigestion -- all are the same condition) include staying away from foods that cause it. Onions, garlic, coffee, carbonated beverages, alcohol, chocolate, fried and fatty foods, citrus fruits and juices, tomato sauces, peppermint, spearmint and spicy foods are notorious Elderly. He resides in Milton with his wife and children.

Milton Hospital provides community-based health care to people of all ages in Milton, Quincy, Braintree, Randolph, Canton, Hyde Park, Dorchester and other local communities. Services include general medical and surgical inpatient care, a complete complement of outpatient health services and 24-hour emergency services. The hospital is a clinical affiliate of Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, and has more than 250 physicians on staff, representing primary care and 22 different medical specialties. troublemakers.

Sleeping with the head of the bed elevated is another way to keep stomach acid in the stomach. Prop 6- or 8-inch blocks under the posts at the head of the bed. In this position, gravity keeps stomach acid in the stomach.

Chewing gum stimulates saliva production, and saliva is a natural antacid.

Don't wear tight garments or tight belts, both of which promote acid reflux. I managed to get through this answer without mentioning a single medicine, not even Tums.

The booklet on GERD -- heartburn -- provides an insight into this common malady and its treatment. Readers can order a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue -- No. 501W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: There seems to be a vaccine for everything except strep throat. My kids get it at the drop of a hat. Their pediatrician claims that tonsillitides don't work. Is there a possibility of a vaccine? — K.T.

ANSWER: There is a possibility of a strep vaccine. Doctors currently are working on it.

Is the doctor sure that these repeated strep throats are strep throats? The only definite proof is a culture of the throat or specific tests for the strep germ. Most sore throats are viral-caused.

If a child has severe and frequent strep throats, removing the tonsils lessens the number of infections. "Frequent" means seven or more infections in one year or five or more in the preceding two years.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

HOW SERIOUS IS YOUR BACK PAIN?

While some people worry that their back pain is symptomatic of a serious (even life-threatening) condition, the likelihood is that it is not. According to recent research involving nearly 1,200 patients who visited chiropractors and other health professionals with complaints of lower-back pain, their problems were very rarely associated with serious conditions such as broken vertebrae, infection, or cancer. In fact, only 11 of the 1,172 patients monitored over 12 months had what could be termed serious conditions. Eight of the 11 had broken vertebrae. Thus, patients with lower-back pain should not allow fears about its potential cause prevent them from seeking treatment. The chiropractor is trained to pinpoint the underlying cause of back pain and relieve it.

Our goal is to restore spinal movement and, as a result, improve function and decrease back pain. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we are a team of health care professionals who want to make a difference in the lives of people around the world. We recommend a chiropractic checkup for all members of the family. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where we want to educate you so that you can make choices you feel good about, are comfortable with, and can be committed to. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. No matter where you live in Eastern Mass., we can offer you exceptional chiropractic service.

P.S. Researchers who conducted the study mentioned above found that the "red flags" used by many health practitioners are really not very useful as indicators of serious problems.

'Four Chaplains Sunday' Feb. 7

Quincy Veterans Service Department reminds the public that Sunday, Feb. 7, 2010, has been mandated by the Congress of the United States as "Four Chaplains' Sunday."

Early in the morning of Feb. 3, 1943, the Troop Transport Dorchester was wallowing through the icy seas off Greenland. Most of the 900 troops on board were asleep in their bunks. Suddenly a torpedo smashed the Dorchester's flank. Frantically pounding up the ladders, the troops milled in confusion on the decks.

In those dark moments of panic, the coolest men aboard were four U.S. Army Chaplains: 1st Lieutenants Clark L. Poling (Reform Church of America), Alexander D. Goode (Jewish), John P. Washington (Catholic), and George L. Fox (Methodist).

The four chaplains led the men to boxes of life jackets and passed them out to soldiers with boat drill precision. When the boxes were empty, the four chaplains slipped off their own precious life preservers, put them on the four GIs and told them to jump.

The Dorchester went down 25 minutes later in a rumble of steam. Some 600 men were lost; the heroic chaplains had helped to save over 200. The last anyone saw of them, they were standing on the slanted deck, their arms linked in prayer to the one God they all served.

However, moving reassuringly among the frightened men were the four chaplains. These chaplains worked to calm the men and handed out available life jackets. Soon the supply of extra life jackets ran out, calmly and without hesitation, all four chaplains stripped off their own life jackets, giving them to the frightened men near them, never asking whether they were Protestant, Catholic or Jewish. It is said that these men of faith linked arms, bowed their heads, and each in their own manner, led the men in prayer, putting their lives in the hands of God.

Survivors recounted the sight and sound of that terrible night picturing those four chaplains who performed a tremendously heroic act.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

It seems a great many people these days complain that their work is boring. The tendency is to blame the job for a lack of challenge. What usually makes work drudgery, however, is a person's attitude - not the work itself.

SCOTT DEWARE No task need be boring, for the simple reason that every job contains within it a hidden challenge. What is this challenge? That challenge is this: How can it be done better?

Could anything be more boring than sweeping floors? ... Many years ago Murray Spangler, a department store janitor in Canton, Ohio, didn't think so, even though the dust made him cough and wheeze. Many men would have given up and quit. Instead, Spangler set out to find a better way to clean floors. ... "Why not eliminate the broom," he wondered. "... maybe something that would suck up dust. ..."

Spangler's decision led to a crude but working vacuum cleaner, which he induced an old friend in the leather business to finance. ... You guessed it! ... The friend's name was H.W. Hoover. ...

John K. Ready, 70

Retired Vice Admiral, Naval Aviator

A local memorial for (Ret.) Vice Admiral John K. Ready, of Conway, Michigan, formerly of Washington, D.C. and Quincy, is planned for a later date.

Interment will be in the Arlington National Cemetery, Washington, DC.

Vice Admiral Ready died Jan. 15.

A 1956 graduate of North Quincy High School, he played hockey for NQHS and later for Boston University. He graduated from Boston University College of Industrial Technology in 1961, earning a B.S. degree in Aeronautical Engineering. While attending college, he worked at Boston Gear Works in Quincy and after graduation he reported for United States Navy flight training in Pensacola, Florida.

In March 1962, he was designated a Naval Aviator and reported to Fighter Squadron 101. He made deployments on USS Enterprise (CVN 65) and USS America (CV 66) with Fighter Squadron 102. In July 1966, he graduated from U.S. Naval Test Pilot School and was assigned to Carrier Suitability Branch, participating in test programs of the F-4, F-8, A-4 and A-7 aircraft. He returned to sea duty in 1969 and served aboard USS John F. Kennedy (CV 67) with Fighter Squadron 14.

In July 1971, he reported to the U.S. Air Force Command and Staff College, Maxwell AFB, Alabama. During this tour, he earned an MBA degree from Auburn University. After assignment with Air Test and Evaluation Squadron Four, he assumed command of the Navy Fighter Weapons School (Top Gun). In July 1974, he served as Executive Officer and became Commanding Officer from 1975-1976 of Fighter Squadron 24.

After a tour as Chief Test Pilot for Strike Aircraft Test Directorate, he assumed command of Carrier Air Wing 11. In January 1981, he assumed command of USS Ashtabula (AO 51) and subsequently commanded USS Saratoga (CV 60). He also commanded Carrier Group 8, and Naval Air Test Center in January 1981; he also took command of Carrier Group 2.

In May 1989, he assumed command of the Naval Air Force U.S. Atlantic Fleet. As Commander, he was the logistic and administrative commander for all naval air forces assigned to the Commander in Chief, U.S. Atlantic Fleet. He was responsible for equipping, training and administering 67,000 officers, enlisted and civilian personnel who maintain more than 1,700 aircraft, nine aircraft carriers and 14 bases.

He was later assigned to

JOHN K. READY

the office of the Chief of Naval Operations as Director, Aviation Plans and Requirements Division (OP 50) and subsequently to the Office of the Secretary of the Navy as Director, Office of Program Appraisal.

Upon retirement from the Navy in 1991, with the rank of Vice admiral, he joined Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Company and in 1993 he was appointed Director, Navy Programs and, later, he was also appointed Director, Joint Strike Fighter Program, providing liaison for customer-related activity in the Washington, DC area.

He retired from Lockheed Martin in 2003, but continued to serve as a consultant on the Joint Strike Fighter Program until his death. He moved from Washington, DC to Conway, Michigan in 2004.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Your natural Arian leadership qualities make you the person others will follow in tackling that important project. But don't get so involved in the work that you neglect your personal life.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Aspects favor sorting through your possessions, both at work and at home, to start giving away what you don't use, don't need or don't like. Relax later with someone special.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) The issues are not quite as clear as they should be. That's why you need to avoid getting involved in disputes between colleagues at work or between relatives or personal friends.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You'll get lots of support from others if you own up to your mistake quickly and include a full and honest explanation. Learn from this experience so that you don't repeat it.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) There might be some early confusion over a major move, whether it's at work or at home. But once you get a full breakdown of what it entails, it should be easier to deal with. Good luck.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Creating order out of chaos, even in the most untidy spaces, should be no problem for organized Virgos. So go ahead and do it, and then accept praise from impressed colleagues.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Whether it's for business purposes or just for leisure, a trip might be just what you need right now. You would benefit both from a change of scenery and from meeting new people.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) While things generally go well this week, a romantic situation seems to have stalled. But you can restart it if you want to. Then again, maybe this is a chance to reassess the situation.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A meeting that was promised quite a while back could finally happen. So be sure you're prepared with everything you'll need to make your case sound convincing and doable.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A workplace blunder could create a problem down the line unless you deal with it right now to see how and why it happened. Don't be surprised at what you might learn.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) This is a good time to re-sort your priorities and see if adjustments are called for. Be honest with yourself as you decide what to keep, what to discard and what to change.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Letting yourself be bathed in the outpouring of love and support from those who care for you will help you get through a difficult period sooner rather than later. Good luck.

BORN THIS WEEK: You have an uncanny gift for reaching out to all people and creating bridges of understanding among them.

Lydon Funeral Home Renews Membership In Lofty Oaks

The Lydon Funeral Home of Quincy has renewed its affiliation with Lofty Oaks Association, a New Hampshire organization dedicated to reforestation and conservation efforts in Massachusetts.

The firm arranges to have a tree planted for each service that they perform to provide a living memorial in honor of the deceased, and to review the forest life of Massachusetts.

The memorial trees are planted in the spring and fall. This program is part of a large endeavor to restore the landscape with the eternal beauty of living trees.

After each service, close family members and friends are informed that Michelle Lydon of the Lydon Funeral Home has arranged for the memorial tree. When the tree has been planted, the designated people will receive a certificate of planting suitable for framing and keeping in the family's history.

Brianna McCombs Celebrates One Of Her Best Birthdays

By JOE REARDON

Brianna McCombs didn't open presents on her birthday. She didn't ask for a cell phone, iPod or fashion clothing. A Blackberry wasn't on her radar. The 13-year-old Point Webster Middle School seventh grader didn't get any gifts.

And it was one of her best birthdays ever.

Instead of presents, Brianna's friends gave money that she and her mother, Lisa Forte, used to purchase much-needed supplies for the dogs and cats housed at the Quincy Animal Shelter. They both added to the fund and bought $150 worth of dog and cat food, kitty litter, bleach, paper towels, animal toys and harnesses.

The perennial honor roll student, who has a cat "Harry" and a turtle named "Kermit," came up with the idea before the holiday season.

"I was thinking of donating for a couple of months," said Brianna. "I did not want any gifts so I asked my friends to donate to the shelter. I felt like I have everything I need, so why not raise some money. And my mom donated as well.

"This is the time of year for giving. People are giving to others, but I feel that we should not forget the animals. These animals are important as well, as they have no home or human to love them. I hope that one day all animals will have a home

"I hope what I am donating helps the shelter in any way."

Brianna was no stranger to the shelter beforehand. She picked up Harry there two years ago. Brianna and Lisa visited the shelter not knowing what type of cat to adopt. When they laid eyes on Harry at the end of the aisle in the last cage on the bottom, they knew he was the perfect choice.

"I went into the shelter for a good month looking for a cat," said Lisa. "It was love at first sight with Harry. It was his personality. He's such a great fit."

Brianna is too young now, but she plans to volunteer her time at the shelter and is interested in pursuing some type of career having to do with animals, whether it is as a scientist, an animal trainer or veterinarian. She's looking into possibly interning at Sea World in Florida or the aquarium in Boston in the summer. Brianna believes that will give her a better idea what field she'd eventually like to study.

Helping the animal shelter is just one of Brianna's passions. She is a member of St. Joseph's Church youth group, student council, in the stage crew for the school play and part of the Green Team, which does cleanups and advocates recycling.

Brianna's language arts teacher Janet Loftus said she's a "humble" girl who is very mature for her age. "Brianna definitely excels in all her classes. This is a plan she had for a while. She's a very soft-spoken, quiet girl. Brianna's very insightful and thoughtful in everything she does."

Venkov, 36, of Toronto, and Vladislav Vladev, 36, of Bulgaria, are scheduled to appear in U. S. District Court for a detention hearing Thursday at 2:30 p.m., charged with use of a counterfeit access device and aiding and abetting.

David Traub, spokesman of District Attorney William Keating, said local charges have been withdrawn since the federal authorities have taken jurisdiction.

The plan started to fall apart on Dec. 26 in Saugus when a customer's card got stuck in the ATM and a section of the machine fell off and police discovered the "skimmer" and the pin hole camera. Securities cameras showed Vladev installing the "skimmer" and Hristov removing the pinhole camera.

Several banks were staked out, one of them Citizens Bank in Quincy, that had experienced unauthorized withdrawals. Hristov was arrested Wednesday.

Venkov, who entered the United State with Hristov on Aug. 22 was traced to the Best Western Motel in Boston and arrested Thursday as he entered his rented car containing $90,000 in $20 bills.

Vladev was taken into custody aboard a Lufthansa flight at Logan Airport just a half hour before it was scheduled to leave.

Capt. Dougan of the Quincy police has a recommendation for the customer to combat the high tech looters.

"Keep your hand over the numbers when you put them in so the lens can't see them."

Not very high tech but effective.

Koch: 'Best In The Business' Working On Downtown Plan

Mayor Thomas Koch and the city's team of negotiators say complex discussions on a $1 billion Quincy Center redevelopment plan continue to move forward gradually with the mayor cautioning that the historic scope of the project will require "the most extensive and painstaking due diligence for any project in memory."

To highlight that point,

Koch, this week publicly introduced the team of lawyers, architects and financial advisors representing the City in negotiations with Street-Works, LLC. The group led by the mayor is negotiating an agreement that will form the financial framework of the full development plan.

That deal, called a Land Disposition Agreement, will be presented to the City Council when completed.

"The individuals making up this team are widely regarded as the best in the business, and a project of this magnitude and complexity deserves nothing less," Koch said.

"We are building a project that will shape the future of our downtown for generations to come."

Over 200 Attend Community Meeting Officials Call Student Shooting 'Isolated Incident'

By JOE REARDON

City officials Monday night addressed concerns of parents, students and members of the community in the wake of the shooting outside North Quincy High School last Wednesday that left a high school student with a gunshot wound.

The incident unfolded on Feb. 3 at 3:30 pm on Hunt St., outside the door to the school gymnasium after a verbal altercation. The victim, Johnell Monteiro, was shot in the left upper thigh and collapsed on the ground outside McDonald's across the street from the school.

The suspects ran into the school and then fled to 74 East Squantum St., according to Quincy Police Chief Paul Keenan. Monteiro was taken by ambulance to the Boston Medical Center where he was treated and later released. The school was put on lockdown for an hour immediately after the shooting and the MBTA red line stopped service so the suspects could not flee by train.

70 Offenders Out Of 25,000 Structures Blight Remedies Need A Fix, Charge Residents, Councillors

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Outraged and frustrated residents charged Monday that city and court efforts targeting blighted real estate have failed, while city councillors vowed to spur enforcement efforts and force offenders to meet basic standards and enact stiffer penalties if necessary.

Some 30 residents attended the Ordinance Committee meeting called by Chairman Douglas Gutro, Ward 5, to focus on blighted properties reported throughout the city.

A dozen residents took the microphone to describe rats and trash in front yards, broken and boarded windows, and unfinished buildings, as well as squatters, drug dealers, and vandals in structures that have been vacant for years.

One speaker described 23 police responses to one dilapidated residence, while a Houghs Neck homeowner, Tom Morris, documented 20 years of struggling for relief and repeated reports to city officials. He cited copies of his old letters to both former Mayor William Phelan and Mayor Thomas Koch.

"I want answers from these appointed officials," said Morris.

Bob Casbana and Crystal Gesiumaria testified about a neglected house with a hole in it, while Anelli Johnson described a Granite Street building abutting her church.

"It's boarded up. It's vacant and it's a (magnet) for homeless," said Johnson who described church members' efforts to improve the property.

"We still clean up litter and debris," said Johnson.

"It looks like an abandoned building," said Councillor Kevin Coughlin, Ward 3, who said the problem's been going on for eight years.

Edward Rogers said, "I look out my front door and see a house boarded up. Kids tagged the whole house (and the city cleaned it up)."

After the house was continually neglected, Rogers said that the Zoning Board of Appeals allowed the property owner to build a second house on a back lot.

That structure has never been completed, according to Rogers who said that the owner now leaves his trucks in the driveway.

To make matters worse, residents said that not only are their taxes increasing but the owners of the blighted structures actually pay less because their properties are distressed and taxes pay for the graffiti removal and the boarding up of the offending buildings.

"We apparently don't have the right rules in place. There's a tremendous amount of frustration," said Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi who said the building department should prioritize the list of offenders.

Raymondi recommended vigorous civil action against offenders with strict enforcement of the $200-a-day fine that is part of the city's three-year old anti-blight ordinance.

"I prefer (that we) knock them off one at a time. These people are crying out for immediate attention," said Raymondi. "The city can do it and put a lien on the property"

"How many years do you let it go?" asked Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest who, also, urged more "aggressive measures" from city officials.

Laforest estimated that, if the city enforced the anti-blight ordinance of $200 a day on one structure, the total for one year would be $73,000. The total would increase to $206,000 for the full length of time that structure had been designated a blight.

"A new and different strategy is required," said Gutro who described joining his neighbors at court in repeated and fruitless attempts to solve a problem in his ward.

Prior to the meeting Gutro asked Building Inspector Jay Duca to name the "worst of the worst" offenders and Duca listed six residences and added Quincy Center's 1620 Hancock St. to the list.

The Hancock Street property burned in 2001, was boarded up by the city and has never been repaired and "devalues the property on either side," according Maralin Manning, director of Business Development, Quincy Chamber of Commerce.

"We should be collecting the $200 a day fine," said Manning of the four-store property that was boarded up at city expense. Manning said one of the original tenants wanted to return after the fire but after three years he gave up because the owner has never repaired the building.

Enforcement

One blighted property hurts the entire neighborhood, according to Gutro who said, "There are blighted properties that affect every neighborhood in this city. There are some blighted properties that go above and beyond."

Gutro described his effort to shame major offenders by naming them and inviting them to the meeting.

Fire Chief Joseph Barron, Drew Scheele, Commissioner, Health Department and Ken Burke, Enforcement Officer, joined Duca to present the city's process.

Barron said his department maintains a list of abandoned properties as those properties are more at risk and fires are not likely to be reported quickly enough.

Duca said his department received 1,300 complaints last year. "We were able to close 95 percent of them," and the top priority is illegal or unsafe housing, he noted.

Of the city's 25,000 structures, 70 or less than one percent of the structures are in non-compliance, according to the data.

In one house, the owner has painted the windows pink and while that house has many other violations, you can't issue a citation "because you paint the house pink," according to Duca who explained the limits of officials in entering private homes and filing complaints.

Of the 70 outstanding complaints, there are currently 40 court cases pending, according to Duca who described negative responses at Quincy District Court where several his cases have been dismissed.

In one case, the judge waived all the fines and the fees assessed by the city, according to Asst. City Solicitor Janet Petkun who outlined the strict legal limits available to the city when dealing with private property and homes.

BLIGHTED PROPERTY - Ward 5 Councillor Douglas Gutro joined Douse Rd. neighbors in court when the city filed action citing this property. Gutro, chairman of the Ordinance Committee, called Monday's meeting to focus on solutions to neglected properties.

If Quincy had a housing court, the process would be eased, according to Duca.

"We don't have the priority we deserve as a city. Everywhere else in the state, there's a housing court," Duca said his department has weekly, bi-weekly and monthly reviews of all complaints. However, he also said that Officer Burke does not present daily fine notices to each offender.

Raymondi suggested that, perhaps, community police could aid Burke and issue tickets in their area. He said that it is essential that offenders be fined on a daily basis and that a civil action, rather than, criminal complaints be filed with accompanying liens against properties.

"It's all about money. It always is," said Raymondi.

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci described some 20 calls and e-mails he'd received on the blight issue and said, "the $200 fine on a daily basis. That's the only way."

In some cases, the city is dealing with elderly property owners or those with mental or health problems, according to Scheele who cited the "Hoarders" reality show.

"There's a mental health (component) where people need help," said Scheele who said 95 percent of the houses are worse on the inside than on the outside.

Barron, also, noted that health issues often, compound dangerous decay creating stove or electrical problems, "the ones I've seen lately are elderly."

To date, there are 200 foreclosed structures in the city, but, as of Feb. 8, banks and holding companies have reported only 100 addresses to City Hall and, subsequently, the Fire Department.

Barron, also, presented the department's list of 13 "Dangerous and Abandoned Buildings."

Laforest asked that the Building Department and the Fire Department coordinate their database. She cited structures that have had problems for five and ten years, and said, "They're not on the fire chief's list."

"It's one thing to have a blighted building; it's another to be dangerous," said Gutro, stating the first goal is to "keep it safe," and long term, "fix the blight."

Coughlin said the city's efforts should be bolstered in the next week or two after Governor Deval Patrick signs legislation labeled Chapter 40T. That will allow cities and towns to place liens against properties in the Registry of Deeds.

Councillors unanimously passed a six-point resolution which included the requirement for detailed day-to-day reports on blight complaints, an analysis of existing ordinances, swift legal actions, stepped up efforts to efforts to coordinate available resources, and support for the city's acceptance of Chapter 40T.

Gutro said he will call future meetings on the issue and assess progress.

NQHS Yearbooks Available In August

North Quincy High School's Class of 2010 yearbooks will be available in August after all.

The Sun was notified by a parent last week that the yearbooks would be delivered in the fall. According to a spokesperson from Jostens, the company that prints the yearbooks, they are categorized as "fall distribution" and "end of the year distribution."

Students will be receiving their yearbooks in August the Jostens representative said. August falls into the "fall distribution category."

Yearbook Co-Advisor Sarah Poulin said the yearbooks would be delivered on time, the same as every other year. "The yearbooks will be distributed in mid-August at a signing and distribution end of the year party," she said.

CUSTOMIZED DIAMOND RINGS
It is becoming increasingly popular to choose diamonds for engagement rings separately from their settings. Doing so provides a chance to select from a wider array of diamonds than otherwise might be possible with pre-set rings. In addition, this customized approach provides consumers with greater freedom to choose the precious metal they want for a setting. It also enables individuals and couples with budgetary concerns to place value emphasis exactly where they want it. With this in mind, some may choose to redirect the resources that they might otherwise spend on a platinum setting toward getting a larger diamond. Conversely, others may choose a slightly smaller diamond

Delegation Supports Measure That Moves On To The Senate

Mariano, Tobin Doubt Ban On Texting While Driving Enforceable

By TOM HENSHAW

Two of the three Quincy legislators who voted for the House bill severely limiting the use of cell phones while driving have expressed the view that it may not be enforceable.

How do you determine someone is breaking the law without eyeballing the violation yourself?

"I doubt if it is enforceable," said Rep. Ron Mariano. "It's up to law enforcement now. There are at least 70 reasons for stopping people now."

"I don't know how it will be enforced," said Rep. Steve Tobin. "We give the chief of police a lot of leeway."

The bill passed the House by a margin of 146 to 9 last week with all three reps from Quincy --- Mariano, Tobin and Bruce Ayers --- voting with the majority.

But first they took up an all-encompassing amendment that banned the use of hand-held cell phones by ALL drivers. The original bill dealt with texting and vision testing and license renewal for those over 75 years of age.

Mariano voted against the amendment but it passed 92 to 66.

"I didn't want to get into banning all phones," he said. "A ban on texting while driving is a good idea but I felt the amendment was going too far for me."

"We could have added a lot to the bill," said Tobin, "like eating a MacDonalds breakfast or putting on eyeliner. They're all distractions for drivers."

Under the amendment, drivers over 18 are permitted to use a hands-free cell phone with voice-activated dialing.

The measure now moves on to the Senate, where it faces tough sledding, particularly from the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), the old folks organization.

The bill also requires drivers 75 and older to take a vision test every five years or obtain a vision screening certificate from a doctor. Right now, a vision test is required every 10 years and a vision exam is held at the registry.

Doctors who report drivers with vision problems to the registry cannot be sued under the bill.

Rep. Ayers was not available for comment.

Registration For Kindergarten March 2

Registration for full-day kindergarten classes and the half-day kindergarten option in Quincy Public Schools for September 2010 will be held Tuesday, March 2 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. local elementary schools.

Children must be 5 years old on or before Aug. 31 to register for next fall's classes. The following five documents must be produced in order to register the child:

- The child's birth certificate with a raised seal
- Proof of residency, such as any two tax bills, utility bills, or a copy of a lease.

- Photo identification of the adult enrolling the student;

- Copy of physician's examination report filed within one year;

- And written records of immunization.

Parents seeking open enrollment must first register at their home school on March 2. The child need not come to the registration.

All questions regarding the kindergarten program should be directed to the local school principal.

Bottle, Can Drive Saturday

A bottle/can drive fundraiser for the Quincy Public Schools HYPER Robotics team will be held Saturday, Feb. 13 from 1 to 4 p.m. at Bethany Congregational Church, 18 Spear St., Quincy Center.

Proceeds from the drive will go towards the robotics team in helping students raise funds for upcoming competitions.

All donations of cans and bottles are appreciated.

U.S. Census Bureau Hiring Temporary Enumerators

The U.S. Census Bureau is seeking census takers from Quincy and other communities to conduct in-person interviews with community residents who do not return census questionnaires.

The census taker positions -- also called enumerators -- are to be filled by individuals with flexible schedules. Most positions require the ability to work a flexible schedule, which may include evenings and weekends.

Some positions may involve shift work. Bilingual workers are needed in many areas.

Census job applicants must be at least 18 years old, have a valid Social Security number, be able to pass a background check, and complete a 30-minute, multiple-choice, employment test that measures knowledge, skills, and abilities required to perform a variety of census jobs. More information, including a practice test, is available at www.2010censusjobs.gov.

In most cases, workers will also be required to possess a valid driver's license and have use of a vehicle.

U.S. citizenship is required to work for the 2010 Census except in rare occasions when no qualified U.S. citizens are available.

All temporary census employees must be able to attend training, for which they will be compensated. Most training sessions are held during the day on weekdays; occasionally, a session may be held in the evening or on the weekend.

For more information on temporary employment with the U.S. Census Bureau, or to schedule an appointment to take an employment test and submit an application, call the toll-free 2010 Census Jobs Line: 1-866-861-2010. TTY callers should use the Federal Relay Service at 1-800-877-8339.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Feb. 20, 1792. President George Washington signs legislation creating the U.S. Postal Service. The federally funded postal services included 75 regional post offices and 2,400 miles of postal routes. The cost of sending a letter ranged from 6 cents to 12 cents.

• On Feb. 18, 1885, Mark Twain publishes his novel "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn." Twain (the pen name of Samuel Clemens) first introduced Huck Finn as the best friend of Tom Sawyer, hero of his tremendously successful novel "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" (1876).

• On Feb. 17, 1915, after encountering a severe snowstorm, the German Zeppelin L-4 crash-lands in the North Sea near the Danish coastal town of Varde. One month earlier, the huge airship had taken part in the first-ever air bombing raid on Britain.

• On Feb. 15, 1933, in Miami, Giuseppe Zangara shoots and fatally wounds Anton Cermak, the mayor of Chicago. Zangara pled guilty to the murder and died in Florida's electric chair on March 20. Today, such a swift outcome would be practically unheard of, particularly where the death penalty is concerned.

• On Feb. 19, 1954, the Ford Thunderbird prototype is born. The T-Bird was a scaled-down Ford built for two. It came with a removable fiberglass hardtop and a convertible canvas roof. With its V-8 and sporty looks, the T-Bird was an image car costing $2,944.

• On Feb. 21, 1965, black nationalist leader Malcolm X is assassinated while giving a speech at the Audubon Ballroom in Harlem in New York City. Malcolm X, born Malcolm Little, had split from the Nation of Islam almost a year before and had escaped several other attempts on his life.

• On Feb. 16, 1979, the Bee Gees receive the Grammy for Best Album of 1978 for "Saturday Night Fever" and also win the Best Pop Group award. The group had dominated the charts in late 1977 and 1978 with three consecutive No. 1 hits from the "Saturday Night Fever" album.

The Miracle On Ice

It was a moment you'll always remember where you were.

But unlike some unspeakable tragedies — such as the 1986 Shuttle Challenger explosion or the 9-11-2001 terrorist attacks — you don't mind recalling memories from this indelible patriotic event.

The "Miracle on Ice" — when the U.S. hockey team defeated the Soviet Union enroute to winning a gold medal at the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y. — will mark its 30th anniversary later this month. Images from that historic competition are sure to be played — and replayed — during this year's Olympiad that begins Friday in Vancouver.

For many of those fortunate to experience those magical February days some 30 years ago, no sporting event comes close to that improbable victory. In these parts, only the Red Sox World Series win in 2004, the Patriots' first Super Bowl victory (in 2002) and for a hockey fan the Bruins winning the Stanley Cup on Mothers Day in 1970 come close. But they all take a back seat to the Miracle on Ice.

And many would agree. The Miracle on Ice has been called the greatest moment in sports history.

It still sends chills up your spine watching those last few seconds tick off the clock and hearing broadcaster Al Michaels utter that famous question: "Do you believe in miracles? Yes!"

In the hockey world, it was David slaying Goliath.

A bunch of amateur and collegiate players clad in red-white-and-blue hockey sweaters competing for the coveted gold medal. The road of victory going directly through what many considered the best hockey team in the world: the red and yellow-jersey Soviets who had won five of the last six Olympic gold medals.

After all, this was the same Soviet team that overwhelmed the U.S. 10-3 in an exhibition game at Madison Square Garden in New York just two weeks before. Heading into the Olympics, the Americans were the longest of long-shots.

Instead, the U.S. took this country on a thrill ride to glory.

And for me, a 15-year-old freshman in high school, it was just what the sports doctor ordered.

Up until that Miracle, this sports fan — like many others around here — had endured a string of disappointments in recent years. The Red Sox 7-game World Series loss in 1975. The Red Sox one-game playoff-loss to the Yankees in 1978. The Bruins 7-game semi-final playoff-loss to the Canadians in 1979.

Outside the sports arena, 1979 was nothing to cheer about. The words "misery index" and "stagflation" were used to describe rampant inflation (11 percent) and growing unemployment. The second oil crisis had hit. Then, on Nov. 4, 1979, 53 Americans were taken hostage in Iran.

If ever the U.S. needed a boost in patriotism and national pride, now was the time.

As the 1980 Olympics opened, a nation was about to hitch its collective heart and soul to a little known team of collegiate hockey players hailing from Boston University to Minnesota.

At that time, I was freshman at Braintree High School and looking forward to February school vacation week. My science teacher and I chatted about the U.S. hockey team's chances one day just before their first game with Sweden. Despite the U.S. tying the Swedes 2-2, no one really gave them much of a chance to compete for a medal.

Instead, it was the beginning of the miracle.

In their second game, the U.S. crushed Czechoslovakia, 7-3. The Czechs were seen as gold medal contenders themselves ... behind the Soviets.

The U.S. then notched three more wins: 5-1 over Norway, 7-2 over Romania and 4-2 over Germany. The good guys advanced to the medal round, along with the team they tied, the Swedes.

The Soviets, on the other hand, steam-rolled through their opening round. Victims were Japan (16-0), the Netherlands (17-4), Poland (8-1), Finland (4-2) and Canada (6-4).

So, the U.S. and Soviets — natural rivals because of the Cold War — were on a collision course like two Zambonis pointed straight at one another on a rink.

How much stock did ABC — the television network airing the Olympics — put into the U.S. hockey team making the medal round? Not much.

In its programming schedule, ABC did not have the game slotted for live television. It was played Friday, Feb. 22, 1980 but most of the U.S. — including the Northeast — had to watch the late-afternoon game on tape delay in prime time.

In those pre-internet and before cable TV days, it was easier to block out any news reports so I didn't know what was going on during the game in real time. So, I waited for my dad to get home for work and then we'd watch the game together.

Only Henry knew the outcome already. But he didn't tell me.

Instead, he offered a bet of $5. He took the U.S. I got the Soviets.

Henry smiled and let out a little chuckle. I ignored him and locked into the tape-delayed game.

The game see-sawed from the beginning as the U.S. fell behind early 1-0 before tying it up, fell behind 2-1 but then tied it up again with one second left in the first period.

The Soviets went ahead 3-2 but the Americans tied it again at 3-3. That set the stage for Mike Eruzione's game-winning tally with 10 minutes left in the third period. Probably the longest 10 minutes of any sporting event ever.

As the final second ticked off the clock, euphoria erupted on the ice and in the stands. The crowd chanted "U.S.A. U.S.A." over and over again. I turned to my father and said, "You knew we won didn't you?"

"Yeah, I did. ... but I didn't want to spoil it for you."

He didn't asked for that $5, either.

Some think the win over the Soviets clinched gold for the U.S. It didn't. The Americans still needed a win over Finland, which they did 4-2 two days later on a Sunday morning. I watched that game on a small black and white TV in my bedroom.

Some images from that experience are still fresh today. One in particular is goaltender Jim Craig — draped in an American flag — looking for his family from the ice after winning the gold medal.

But what really stands out was the medal ceremony. Eruzione, standing alone at the small center podium, singing the Star Spangled Banner as the American flag is raised high above. And then, he gestures to all his teammates — more like imploring them — to join him on the medal stand. In a patriotic stampede, the teammates rushed to join their captain basking in the improbable one more time.

Since that gold medal, Olympic hockey has changed. Professionals from the NHL have been allowed to compete since 1998. But I prefer the U.S. Olympic teams be stocked with amateurs and collegiate players. And since 1980, the U.S. has won only one medal in men's hockey (a silver in 2002.)

The Olympics, to me, are all about no-name American athletes competing on international sports biggest stage. Let them have their shot at glory.

I'll still be rooting for the U.S. to win hockey gold in Vancouver.

But I'm looking forward to reliving all the 1980 heroic highlights more.

STEVE TOBIN will seek re-election as a state representative and would only run for state senate if that seat became vacant, he told The Sun.

Some political observers noticed Tobin making the rounds in Rockland after the Jan. 19 special U.S. Senate election won by Sen. Scott Brown. A win by Martha Coakley would have set off a chain reaction and create some open seats including the State Senate seat held by Michael Morrissey. But Morrissey is running for re-election and so too is Tobin ... unless Coakley doesn't seek re-election as attorney general and those seats become open.

"I'm getting ready if there is an open seat (for Senate). I'm just being prepared. If there isn't an open seat, I'll be seeking re-election," Tobin said. A fundraiser is set for Friday, March 18 at the Commonwealth Restaurant and Pub on the Parkway.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1909 real photo postcard view of Hancock Street in Norfolk Downs looking south from its intersection with Billings Road. The triple-decker on the left is still extant and is now condominiums. The houses on the right were bought and torn down by the Boston Gear Works whose extensive factory operations dominated this area for many years. The company later built an office building on the site of the houses between Hayward and Burgess Streets. That office building and several other adjacent buildings are now the Granite Loft Condominiums. After 100 years here, beginning in 1906, Boston Gear has relocated to Charlotte, N.C. In 1948, busses replaced the electric trolleys that ran with the overhead wires and the tracks down the middle of the street. When it was first built this portion of Hancock Street was known as the Neponset Turnpike and charged tolls. Except for the slight curve in the foreground, it ran pretty much in a straight line from Quincy Square to the Neponset River where a bridge was built. 6% Cuts For All City Departments

By FRANK McCAULEY

Anticipating City Council approval of a sewer user-fee and a "reasonable" reduction in local aid, Mayor James Sheets said all city departments would be reduced by six percent to balance the FY1991 budget.

"If we get the fee, the budget cuts will be six percent below this year's budget level," Sheets said.

The fee most likely will pass at the Feb. 20 meeting of the City Council.

A majority of the councillors have indicated support for the fee, which will generate $9.5 million next fiscal year, which begins July 1. With the fee, the city will raise $121 million in FY1991 however the city faces a $15 million shortfall in FY1992.

RECYCLING FOR GLASS, MAYBE LEAVES

The city's recycling program will be extended to include a drop-off center for glass in the spring and possibly leaf composting in the fall, city officials announced.

The announcement was made by Mayor James Sheets, Ward 3 Councillor Lawrence Chretien, Ward 1 Councillor Peter Kolson and DPW Commissioner David Colton.

Chretien is chairman of the city's Recycling Committee while Kolson is chairman of the City Council's Public Works Committee.

Sheets said he will "work closely with the Recycling Committee to make these programs a priority of my administration's first year in office."

Morrissey Pleaded Powerball Available In Bay State

State Senator Michael W. Morrissey (D-Quincy) recently announced that legislation he sponsored that was signed into law to allow the Commonwealth to participate in multistate gaming has paved the way for Powerball to be played in Massachusetts.

"Powerball is an exciting game as well as an excellent source of new revenue during this tough fiscal time. We are trying to spread the word that Powerball is now on sale in the Commonwealth," Morrissey said.

Because of recent funding cuts to the Lottery Commission, there were no funds to advertise this new game. The first drawing Massachusetts took part in was Feb. 3.

Powerball is played in 31 states, and the Virgin Islands.

Morrissey, who is chairman of Committee on Consumer Protection which oversees lottery issues, sponsored the first bill over a decade ago to allow Massachusetts to participate in a multi-state lottery game.

"Mega Millions was an exciting opportunity at the time, and it has proven to be a successful generator of additional millions of dollars for our cities and towns," he said.

Mega Millions is played in 12 states, including Massachusetts.

Last year, Morrissey worked with state Treasurer Timothy Cahill and Lottery officials to craft legislation to allow Massachusetts to participate in Powerball.

"I am pleased that the legislature and governor supported giving the Lottery the tools it needed to realize this new source of revenue,"

Morrissey said.

He also applauded the efforts of Treasurer Cahill and Lottery officials who were successful in their negotiations allowing Massachusetts to join Powerball. The Lottery estimates that the new game is expected to bring in an additional $25 million into the state each year.

"Massachusetts residents aren't going to have to cross state lines to buy Powerball tickets now - I look forward to more Massachusetts Powerball winners," Morrissey added.

Ward 5 Democrats To Hold Caucus Feb. 20

Registered Democrats in Ward 5 will hold a caucus Saturday, Feb. 20 at 3 p.m. at Lori Ann's Restaurant, 883 Hancock St., Quincy, to elect nine delegates and three alternates to the 2010 Massachusetts Democratic Convention.

Morrissey Office Hours Feb. 18 At Quincy City Hall

Sen. Michael Morrissey will hold office hours Thursday, Feb. 18 from 6 to 7 p.m. at Quincy City Hall, second floor conference room.

Morrissey welcomes residents to come and discuss legislative proposals or other issues.

Those unable to attend may contact Morrissey by phone at 617-722-1494, by fax at 617-722-1055, written mail at Room 413-D, State House, Boston, MA 02133, or by e-mail at Michael.W.Morrissey@state.ma.us.

Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Friday, June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center in Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

The caucus is open to all Democrats in Ward 5. All ballots will be written and secret.

Those who elected as delegates and/or alternates, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in three categories: youth, minority, and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, disability, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct is strictly prohibited.

Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, MA 02129, not later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, contact chairman Joe Doyle at 617-388-4114.

THE 22ND QUINCY Lunar New Year Festival will be celebrated Sunday, Feb. 28th at North Quincy High School (indoors) from 10:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Festival Feb. 28 At North Quincy High School Quincy Lunar New Year Welcomes Year Of The Tiger

The 22nd Quincy Lunar New Year Festival will take place Sunday, Feb. 28th at North Quincy High School (indoors) from 10:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Last year's festival attracted an audience of over 7,000, making it one of the most popular and largest celebrations of the Lunar New Year in Massachusetts.

Chinese New Year begins Feb. 14 and is the most important holiday for Chinese families as it is a time of reunion and thanksgiving. Each year is governed by one of the twelve animals of the Chinese Zodiac, each with its own special characteristics. This year is the Year of the Tiger, an animal known for being ambitious and determined.

"The 2010 festival will mark not only the Year of the Tiger but also the community's 22nd year of celebrating our diversity, tradition, and unity in Quincy," said Peter Tam, co-chair of the festival.

"We hope to build on the success of our previous festivals to bring together the community to celebrate and increase awareness of Asian cultures, and to better serve the needs of Quincy's Asian-American Community."

Quincy Asian Resources Inc. (QARI) invites people of all ages and backgrounds to celebrate Lunar New Year. Festivities are free and programs include traditional lion dancing, an array of Asian food, and traditional and modern performances by musicians and dance troupes.

Additionally, the festival will feature a Chinese cultural section, where volunteers will demonstrate Chinese brush painting, calligraphy, paper folding, dumpling making, and have samples of Chinese candies. Children are invited to enjoy games, crafts and the popular Red Envelop ceremony at the end of the day.

"This year's festival promises to continue a proud tradition in Quincy of bringing together many segments of the community for fun, food, and celebration of Asian culture. The enormous growth of this festival over the years is a testament not only to the dedication and skills of the community volunteers and sponsors; but also to the tremendous pride Quincy has in its diversity," said festival co-chair Ada Lam.

The festival is supported by our Grand Sponsor State Street Bank as well as many others. This, together with the commitment and work of local community groups, businesses, government and social service agencies and individuals in the region, has resulted in the Quincy Lunar New Year Festival becoming a major cultural event for Greater Boston.

ing in computer information systems; Jack Tran, a sophomore majoring in undecided business; Lily Man, a freshman majoring in undecided business; and Jenny Tam, a senior majoring in mathematics.

Eleemosynary At ENC Feb. 11-13

Eastern Nazarene College's Communication and Theatre Arts Department will present the play, Eleemosynary, at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 11-13 at the Cove Fine Arts Center, 23 East Elm Ave., Quincy.

Directed by ENC alumna Stefanie DeLeo, Eleemosynary - which means "dependent upon or supported by charity" - examines the family ties and tensions that exist among three generations of women: grandmother, daughter and granddaughter. Written by Lee Blessing, the play received the 1997 Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award for its insightful exploration of family relationships.

"Eleemosynary is an intergenerational play about three women coping with brilliance, eccentricity, the question of normalcy and the universal desire to make a connection," DeLeo said. "I think this story will resonate with audiences, because our relationship with our parents so intimately influences who we are, whether it's the strength of that relationship or the lack of it."

For ticket information, call the ENC box office at 617-745-3715.

Jane Esterquest Earns Honors At Skidmore College

She is the daughter of Jay Esterquest and Marjorie Jordan of Quincy.

EDNA WENTWORTH

Edna Wentworth 100 Years Young

Edna Wentworth celebrated her 100th birthday recently with family members at her Montclair home where she has lived for the past 75 years.

Mrs. Wentworth and her late husband Frank raised their daughters Carol and Patricia in their North Quincy home. Both daughters graduated from North Quincy High School.

Carol and her husband Lawrence Mendes live in Montclair, Patricia and her husband Harold McKenzie in Ft. Wayne, IN.

Mrs. Wentworth has three grandchildren, six great grandchildren and one great great grandchild.

Before her retirement, Mrs. Wentworth was employed as a secretary. Her late husband Frank worked at the Fore River Shipyard.

Even at 100 years old, Edna Wentworth is still physically active, according to her daughter, Carol Mendes who said her mother still enjoys getting out for drives several days a week.

Tiffany Porter On Dean's List

Tiffany Porter of Quincy has been named to the Dean's List for the fall semester at Mount Ida College in Newton.

United Methodist Church Participating In 'Daffodil Days'

With winter winds and cold, the Quincy Community United Methodist Church is bringing an early touch of spring to those who need it the most by participating in the American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days.

The church will collect money by purchasing daffodil bouquets and pots of daffodils. The church's worship committee chairperson, Jeannie O'Connor, is coordinating the drive.

The Rev. Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor, said "One of the most popular donations is the "Gift of Hope." "That's a bouquet of daffodils anonymously given to someone who has cancer. The bouquets are sent to area hospitals, and tell somebody that someone else really cares."

This year, the Boyd's Bear, designed for a child will be sent anonymously to a child suffering from cancer.

The church is located at 40 Beale St., and is handicapped accessible.

For more information, call 617-773-3319.

Broad Meadows PTO Comedy Show Feb. 26

Broad Meadows Middle School PTO will host a Comedy Night, Friday, Feb. 26 from 7 to 11 p.m. at the Quincy Sons of Italy, 120 Quarry St., West Quincy.

The event will feature Boston, New York and Las Vegas headliners Tommy Dunham, Christine Hurley and Jerry Thornton.

Dunham has headlined clubs all over the Northeast for more than 20 years. His act involves growing up on the South Shore in the 1970s as well as parenting today.

Hurley was the first runner-up in the nationally televised "Nick-at-Nite" search for America's Funniest Mom contest in 2005. Her humor is primarily observational that most can identify with. She has the ability to find amusement and humor in everyday situations.

Thornton, a former winner of the WBCN Boston Comedy Riot Competition, has worked with national headliners Lenny Clarke, Steven Wright and Anthony Clark.

In addition to his comedy,

Thornton has also appeared on HBO in the award-winning Red Sox documentary, "Curse of the Bambino," and writes for several Web sites.

The event will include a Chinese buffet dinner from Imperial Terrace, cash bar, silent auction, and raffles.

Auction and raffle donations are being accepted.

Tickets are $20 per person and will be available at the door.

For more information, call Broad Meadows Middle School at 617-984-9723.

Morrisette Legion Post Memorial Mass Monday

The Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion will celebrate its 81st annual Memorial Mass Monday, Feb. 15 at 10 a.m. at St. Mary's Church, Crescent St., West Quincy.

The Rev. Dominic Men-na will celebrate the Mass.

Prior to the Mass, Commander Charles Towers and Historian Guy Ferris will place wreaths at the graves of Cyril P. Morrisette and John A. Boyd in St. Mary's Cemetery at 8:45 a.m.

Past Commanders Henry Bradley and Lawrence Norton will read the roll call of deceased members. A list of names of over 1,000 deceased members will be handed out for families and guests to take home.

Past Commanders Thomas Stansbury and Robert LeFleur are chief marshal and chaplain respectively.

Honored guests will be the families of deceased veterans.

Historian Guy Ferris urges all Morrisette Post members, veterans' organizations and the public to attend the special ceremony honoring all deceased veterans.

Prayers will be offered for all uniformed men and women who are deployed overseas, particularly in Iraq and Afghanistan.

New veterans and their families are welcome to Joint American Legion Post 294.

Souther Tide Mill Public Information Meeting Feb. 25

Friends of the Souther Tide Mill, Inc. will hold a public information meeting Thursday, Feb. 25 at 7 p.m. at the Quincy Point Congregational Church Fellowship Hall, 444 Washington St., Quincy Point.

Topics will include update information and present plans on the Souther Tide Mill restoration project and seek input and public support for this urgent historic preservation assignment. All Quincy residents are invited to join who are concerned that these historic structures and land areas valuable natural resources are protected. Residents also have an opportunity to join the Friends at this meeting.

The Mill is sitting on the busy Southern Artery on the former Quincy Lumber Company and next to the Town River Bay.

Souther Tide Mill is one of the last and only tide mill in the United States which still retains both a historic gristmill and sawmill.

Souther Tide is an important part of Quincy's history along with its granite and shipbuilding history along its significant waterfront and estuary.

The public is invited to view the informative presentation and to give input and support for the Mill's preservation.

For more information, call Carolyn Marks at 617-328-5735.

Ward 3 Democrats To Caucus Saturday

Registered Democrats in Ward 3 will hold a caucus Saturday, Feb. 13 at noon at Granite Place, 125 Granite St., Quincy.

Democrats will elect nine delegates and three alternates to the 2009 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Friday, June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center in Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Ward 3. All ballots will be written and secret.

Those not elected as delegate and/or alternate, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority, and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, disability, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is prohibited.

Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, MA 02129 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, contact Ward 3 Democratic Chairman Michael Covais, 617-328-8735.

Scammed Homeowners Suffer Damaged Residence

One of the houses listed as the "Worst of the Worst" blighted structures in the city is 54 Spring St which is owned by Jeffrey and Laura O'Rourke.

Building Inspector Jay Duca compiled the list using such criteria as the number of complaints and the damage and appearance of the structures.

Duca presented the list to the Ordinance Committee Monday when they focused on blight issues throughout the city.

Chairman Doug Gutro, Ward 4, personally invited owners of the "Worst of the Worst" properties to attend the meeting and reserved seats for them in the front row.

Only the O'Rourkes came to the meeting to explain the condition of their property.

And there's a sad story behind that, according to their attorney, Bill Maloney.

Maloney described damage done to the house at 54 Spring St. by an unscrupulous contractor who took the owners $110,000, gutted the structure, and abandoned the job.

Maloney told the Ordinance Committee Monday that the owners were caught in a scam and there is an active court case against the contractor.

"They engaged a contractor to do the whole house," Maloney said, but the contractor "just abandoned the job."

"They are themselves victims," said Maloney.

The owners, Jeffrey and Laura O'Rourke, both described their ordeal Monday when the committee discussed remedies for blighted properties in the city.

Laura O'Rourke described her wish to be back home and "out of the house that I'm in. I would stay up all night packing."

O'Rourke said they gave their money to a friend, a Boston firefighter, who has turned out to be "one of the worst slumlords in Boston."

Even now, when she stops by her old home, O'Rourke said, "I usually sit in the driveway and cry."

erations, and we are doing everything in our power to ensure that the agreement protects the city's interests and leads to the historic private investment and job creation that this endeavor is all about."

Mayor Koch said of the city's negotiating team:

• Attorney Thomas Kiley, a prominent lawyer in Massachusetts and a Quincy native. His role is to coordinate the negotiating team and provide overall legal counsel to the city on the downtown plans.

• Attorney Robert Fishman is a partner with the firm Nutter, McClennan, and Fish in Boston. He is responsible for the legal structure of the development agreement and protecting the City when it comes to land disposition, permitting, and financing.

• An expert at the dozens of legal issues surrounding a development program of this magnitude, Fishman has been deeply involved in many of the most ambitious development projects in Massachusetts over the last 20 years.

• Sarah Woodworth is the chief financial advisor for the project as a managing director of the firm, W-ZHA, Inc. She is the point person on the complex financial structure of the development plan, and is working to make sure the city's risk is minimized. The firm has been involved with major redevelopment projects akin to Quincy in cities across the United States.

• Jim Edwards, president of Holmes & Edwards, a Quincy-based architectural firm. A lifelong Quincy resident, he is also the president of the Quincy Historical Society. He knows the City, its character and has a great deal of insight of how to maintain the City's character as the project moves forward, officials said.

The mayor also highlighted the role of Planning Director Dennis Harrington in the development plan, saying "no one has more institutional knowledge of Quincy Center or development in Quincy as both a private local practice lawyer and Planning Director than Dennis."

"I am confident that there is not a project in Massachusetts that has the combination of talent and experience than we have working on our behalf," Koch said.

Mayor Launches Blog On City Website

Mayor Thomas Koch announced Tuesday that he will continue to expand online communication from City Hall by launching his own blog on the City's website, www.quincyma.gov.

The mayor will write about a wide range of issues, city initiatives and events on the blog, which will welcome email feedback from residents. The mayor said he expects to update the blog regularly.

"We have said from Day One that communicating with our residents is a vital part of what we do, and this will be another great way to enhance those efforts," Koch said. "I hope residents find it informative and useful, and we are always looking for feedback."

The blog is another step forward for the dramatic transformation of the City's website over the last year, which to date has included a total redesign, improved access, online bill payments, email and text messaging emergency alerts, a new calendar function and a number of other changes, Koch said.

"We are continuing to expand its reach, and use every tool at our disposal to make it the most accessible and useful and user-friendly website for any city in Massachusetts," Koch said.

He added that the City's technical team has been working on a plan to incorporate social networking into the site for the last several months. Those functions are expected to be unveiled in coming weeks, Koch added.

JORGE GONZALEZ of Quincy was recently awarded the President's Award from Shaw's Supermarket.

Quincy's Jorge Gonzalez Selected Shaw's Associate Of The Year

Shaw's Supermarket's recently awarded Quincy resident and Shaw's Evening Manager Jorge Gonzalez the company's prestigious President's Award.

The award, the highest honor for Shaw's associate, is given each year to only two of Shaw's 27,000 associates.

"Jorge's passion, high standards, and solid results set a great example of what we can accomplish at Shaw's," said Shaw's President Mike Witynski. "He demonstrates a strong sense of values at home, work, and in the community. On behalf of Shaw's, I am delighted to present Jorge with President's Award for the southern region."

This is the second time in eight years that Gonzalez has been recognized as Associate of the Year. He began his career at Shaw's in 2000 as a bagger and was promoted to cashier, customer service manager, and personnel coordinator. He is currently the evening manager at the Shaw's Allston store, and he will soon join the team at the new Chestnut Hill Star Market in Newton.

Under Gonzalez's leadership, the 2009 Spirit of Giving campaign at Shaw's Allston finished in Top 25 out of approximately 195 Shaw's stores, for dollars contributed to the cause. Gonzalez has volunteered at the Boston Medical Center for the past six years and is a role model to his younger siblings and cousins.

To honor exemplary associates, Associates of the Year are chosen throughout Shaw's, representing the Store Support Center, distribution and transportation centers, and retail stores. From this, only two associates receive the President's Award.

Rejects Obama's 'Race To The Top' Program Koch Disappointed By Teachers' Union Vote

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that he is disappointed that the teachers' union, the Quincy Education Association (QEA), rejected President Obama's "Race To The Top" program.

"I'm disappointed and I made my disappointment known directly to the union president," Koch said of the vote by QEA's Executive Board to bypass membership in Obama's special education initiative which would have brought $1 million to the city schools over a four-year period.

"That said, I know our teachers care deeply for our children and the Quincy Public Schools, and we all know that we need to work together moving forward to protect our classrooms amid this economic crisis.

"We are all in this together, and I believe everyone knows that: our administration, the superintendent, the School Committee and our teachers."

School Committee Vice-Chairman Anne Mahoney said she, too, was disappointed in the QEA's vote, "Out of the (state's) ten largest cities, we are the only city not to participate. It disheartening.

"We won't have a seat at the table and Quincy misses an opportunity to participate in the planning," said Mahoney.

"I hope they understand it was a principled decision," said QEA President Paul Phillips who acknowledged that the union's vote has sparked a firestorm of criticism from parents and school committee members.

"This decision was reached overwhelmingly by the Executive Board of the QEA. It was not a vote taken lightly," Phillips said of the decision.

Phillips said the "Race To The Top" program will penalize schools and teachers in disadvantaged schools by evaluating teachers almost solely on test results, "No one will want to teach in any of those schools."

In addition, Phillips said the program's ultimate goal is to develop a national curriculum. As an example of such anticipated uniformity, Phillips said that teachers across the country would be following such strict guidelines that they'd all be teaching the same lesson plan on the same date.

"We can not spend the money as we wish," said Phillips who said the million dollars would be distributed over four years and "will not help our budget problems. The money must 'supplement' and cannot 'supplant' budget."

The QEA's decision raised a firestorm across the city with net comments criticizing the union vote.

Kathy Hubley, President of the Citywide Parents' Council, added the issue to Monday's meeting agenda after assessing the number of emails on the subject. The meeting was held at Broad Meadows School.

Phillips presented the union's view to some 40 persons and while the parents were disappointed with the QEA decision, "...a lot of information was shared," according to School Committee member Emily Lebo who represented the School Committee.

"The audience was very much in favor of moving forward," said Lebo.

Book Club Meets Feb. 22

Holbrow's Flowers:

Cupid's Messenger for 120 Years

For over 120 years, Holbrow's Flowers has delivered messages of love for tens of thousands of their customers and they are still melting hearts with a top-notch array of roses, special arrangements, tropical flowers, flowering and green plants.

Owner and manager Patricia Holbrow Long follows the standards of quality, service and reliability established in 1889 by her great-grandfather, Frederick W. Holbrow, founder of the firm.

"We stand behind every order that we fill," Holbrow says of the hundreds of floral deliveries sent each week from her North Quincy shop where red hearts, roses, pink azaleas, plant baskets and balloons populate the windows and shelves.

Holbrow's Flowers, North Quincy, is located at 60 Billings Rd. with onstreet parking and a municipal parking lot nearby. Phone number is 617-328-1730.

Patricia, a Quincy resident and lifelong florist, studied floral design, but says she learned much more from her Grandfather Bill about quality flowers, special deliveries, and establishing trust with customers. "In my first years, there were blizzards, floods and ice storms on Valentine's Day, but Holbrow's still got the flowers out," Long recalls of her early training.

Right now, Holbrow's is ready for Valentine's Day 2010 and eager to help each customer send his or her message of caring, but her shop serves all purposes all year-round. Long believes Holbrow's success is in the personal connection with each customer. "We listen carefully and work hard to meet special requests and tailor each order to the customer's wishes."

Holbrow's sympathy arrangements, get-well bouquets, anniversary and birthday specials are available twelve months of the year and can be sent, not only to Quincy, but directly all over the South Shore, to Boston hospitals and business, and to over a dozen North Shore cities and towns.

In addition, Holbrow's teams up with wire services for speedy delivery anywhere in the states and worldwide.

Holbrow's website, holbrowsflorist.com features a sampling of the wide variety of arrangements, floral tributes and plants readily available at the North Quincy shop.

Officials Call Student Shooting 'Isolated Incident'

Police surrounded the house and entered with the canine unit. The four suspects, including the alleged gunman, surrendered without incident and arrested. A search warrant was obtained around 10pm and two .22 caliber weapons were retrieved from the house.

Keenan said the incident and ensuing search for the suspects happened quicker than usual because the police were very quick in getting to the scene and securing the area after receiving the 911 call at 3:33 p.m.

"In this instance it happened very quickly," Keenan said.

The alleged gunman, Leon Perry, 19, of Dorchester, was charged with assault with attempt to murder, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. A charge of unlawful possession of a firearm was expected to be added.

He pleaded innocent at his arraignment on Feb. 4 at Quincy District Court. Perry dropped out of North Quincy High School in September.

Also arraigned and charged with accessories before a crime were Perry's brother, Maurice Perry, 19, of 459 Hancock St., David J. White, 19, of 74 E. Squantum St., and Christopher Ochs, 19, of 619 Quarry St.

Keenan told the more than 200 people who attended the meeting in the North Quincy High School auditorium that he wanted to "put some of the fears to rest" regarding misinformation that was put out shortly after the shooting. Keenan said the case is still very much open and there is an "ongoing investigation."

School Superintendent Dr. Richard DeCristofaro met with Keenan and Mayor Thomas Koch to go over how the situation was handled by the police. "There is nothing more important than the safety of our students and staff in the Quincy schools," DeCristofaro said.

Koch added, "Safety is number one and will continue to be number one."

All three officials believed the shooting was an isolated incident, not part of a rash of events. "This is an incident," said Koch. "We haven't had a rash."

Keenan said the threat of retaliation is a concern to the police and they have been doing background checks on the suspects and checks on certain areas in Boston.

CITY OFFICIALS and school administrators listen to concerned parents at Monday night's community meeting at North Quincy High School. The meeting addressed the shooting of a 17-year-old student outside the school last Wednesday.

"We're trying to stay ahead of the curve," he said.

Much of the discussion had to do with the fact that one of the suspects, Maurice Perry, was a student in the alternative G.O.A.L.S. program. The program, which was started 15 years ago, includes students who have difficulty fitting into the mainstream. There are currently 33 students, five teachers and a pair of counselors. The majority of the kids are between the ages of 14-18. They may have one or two classes at the high school and have lunch separate from the rest of the student body. Many questioned why the at-risk students were allowed into the high school at all.

"We take them and make sure they get the respect they deserve," said DeCristofaro. "It's really a separate program within the Quincy Public Schools."

DeCristofaro said the city is obligated by federal law to take the students into the program up to the age of 22, even if they had been incarcerated.

Adam Moreschi, who spoke at Monday's meeting, was at the YMCA when the shooting took place. The North Quincy High student said he was "most concerned" about the misinformation on the television. He also believed the school should have been closed the following day.

"The students that didn't feel comfortable going to school would be penalized," he said.

Paul Keeley, whose son is a freshman at the high school, said he was worried about people going into the school after hours. "I don't believe the school is responsible for what happens in the streets," said Keeley. "I believe they came in seeking a safe haven."

Frank Hogan praised the fact that an assembly was held for the community. "The greatest asset you have are all you people here tonight," he said. "I applaud you for coming. It's up to you to take care of your neighborhoods."

Former School Committee woman Mary Collins commended Keenan and the police department for its quick response in getting to the scene of the shooting and securing the area.

Patrice Sullivan, whose twin daughters attend the high school, asked about the possibility of installing metal detectors and said her daughters were still very anxious about the incident.

Kathleen Roland questioned whether there were other crime issues in the neighborhoods around the high school with kids other than North Quincy High students. Deirdre Durkin-Haskell believes now is the time to take action to avoid another incident.

"I think we need to talk about being proactive," she said. "We need to be told more about what's going to happen."

After the assembly, Sullivan said she had "mixed feelings" about the information she heard, but believed the city officials were on top of the problem. "I don't think the kids or parents are feeling totally safe," she said. "I don't think they talked enough about the kid who was shot. I do think Mayor Koch will do well for the city."

TREAD LIGHTLY

Many people receive treadmills as holiday presents or purchase them to lose weight as part of a New Year's resolution. Exercising on a treadmill, if not done with care, can result in complicating common conditions. The normal human cadence, which is 90 to 120 steps per walking minute, experiences a substantial spike during treadmill use. Plantar fasciitis, a painful inflammatory condition of the foot, can result. In addition, as the treadmill user tires during the exercise, the natural response is to shift the upper body forward, causing an unnatural running gait. This can result in overworking the Achilles tendon, causing nagging pain. Proper training techniques and decreasing inclines and speed while using a treadmill can keep negative effects in check.

When your physical activity has your feet hurting, get the advice and treatment from the professional foot care specialists. Whatever is causing pain in your every step, we're here at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER to help. For instance, our state-of-the-art footcare facilities offer relief from the painful condition of hyperpronation through HyProCure™, a stabilizing procedure that eliminates the discomfort of excessive motion of the foot and ankle. Call us for comprehensive foot care at 781-986-3668. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221.

HINT: If you feel discomfort while using a treadmill, try dropping the speed and lowering the incline.

Nearly 50 Receive Degrees

Eastern Nazarene College Holds Winter Commencement

Nearly 50 students received Associate's, Bachelor's and Master's degrees from Eastern Nazarene College at the Quincy liberal arts college commencement.

Held at the Wollaston Church of the Nazarene adjacent to the college's main campus, the graduation ceremonies were led by President Corlis McGee and featured a commencement address by Dr. Linda Nease Scott.

A 1972 ENC graduate, Scott has a long association with Eastern Nazarene: Both her grandfather and father served as presidents of the college, while her grandmother served as registrar and foreign student advisor for nearly four decades. Scott currently serves as an associate professor and elementary education coordinator at ENC.

Students receiving degrees at ENC's winter commencement exercises include:

ENC Main Campus:
Bachelor of Arts: Timothy Gregory of Queens, NY and Erin Prendergast of Hartford, CT. Bachelor of Science: Sarah MacFee of Weymouth. Master of Education: Melanie Attardo of Raynham, Monica Babcock of Weymouth, Maria Coughlin of Quincy, Neal Drew of Weymouth, Amanda Errichiello of Weymouth, Kerri Jacques of Braintree, Ashley Joy of Bridgewater, Beverly Kenney of Assonet, Peter Lang of Somerville, Maureen Murphy of Quincy, Amy Paddock of Gardner, Lorraine Principi of Braintree, Belinda Rantstrom of Quincy, Jennifer Wesinger of Pembroke and Marla Yanovitch of Quincy.

LEAD Adult Studies Program:

Associate of Arts: Joseph Healy of Charlestown, Promise Anukem of Braintree, Cuthbert Martinez of Brockton and Maritza Vazquez-Doyle of Worcester. Bachelor of Arts: Sharon Butler-Loreus of Boston, Kevin Cleary of Quincy, Elizabeth Coughlin of Quincy, Deborah Farnum of Dorchester, John Fish of Quincy, Cheryl Martin-Gloss of Brighton, Richelle Smith of Roxbury and Anthony West of Chelsea.

Bachelor of Science: Anthony Benigni of Weymouth, Jaclyn Brogna of Quincy, Wilson Dolne of Brockton, Czarr Freeman of Brockton, James Maher of Dedham, Wendelyn Mapson of Salem, NH, Shaun Needle of Abington, Stephen Pall-eschi of Pembroke, NH and James Purcell of Stoughton. Master of Science: Tajuana Allison of Brighton, John Camara of North Easton, Jamie Campbell of Weymouth, Melissa Cressman of Quincy, Kevin Dwyer of Quincy, Victoria Gill of Brockton, Brian Guzman of Quincy and Dawn Vanessa Henry of Woburn.

Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) is a fully accredited liberal arts college. With approximately 1,100 students distributed across its traditional residential undergraduate program as well as adult studies and graduate programs, ENC is known for its success in getting students into top graduate and medical schools, and has a 100 percent acceptance rate for its students into law school.

Ward 4 Democrats To Caucus Feb. 18

Ward 4 Democrats will open their annual caucus Thursday, Feb. 18, at 7 p.m. at the Ward 4 Community Center, 100 Brooks Av., according to Thomas Fabrizio, Ward Chairman.

The caucus, open to all registered Democrats in Ward 4, will elect nine delegates and three alternates for the 2010 convention.

All ballots will be written and secret. The ward's eight delegates and two alternates will be equally divided between men and women. The ninth delegate and third alternate delegate will be either a man or woman in accordance with Democratic Party rules.

Those not elected, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority or disabled.

Delegates will represent Ward 4 at the 2010 Democratic Convention planned for the first weekend in June at the DCU Center, Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will gather to endorse statewide candidates.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited.

Challenges to the process must be filed within 10 days of the caucus date with the Mass. Democratic party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, 02120.

For more information, contact Fabrizio at 617-479-0037 or the Democratic State Committee, 617-776-2676.

Ward 2 Democrats Caucus Saturday

Registered Democrats in Ward 2 will hold a caucus at the Fore River Clubhouse, 16 Nevada Rd. on Saturday, Feb. 13 at 10 a.m. to elect 10 delegates and three alternates to the 2010 Massachusetts Democratic Convention, according to Ward 2 Chairman Brad Croall.

All registered Democrats in Ward 2 are invited to attend.

The statewide Convention will be held Friday, June 4 and Saturday, June 5 at the DCU Center, Worcester. At that time, Democrats from across the state will meet to endorse statewide candidates.

All ballots will be written and secret. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women. Those not elected, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority or disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited.

Challenges to the process must be filed within 10 days of the caucus date with the Mass. Democratic party, 56 Roland St., Suite 203, Boston, 02120.

For more information, contact Croall at 617-930-0106.

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

At JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY, we have provided our friends and neighbors with excellent service for 53 years. We offer policies for personal and commercial cars and trucks, as well as homes and commercial properties. Whether you need an add-on policy or a completely new policy, we can provide you with comprehensive coverage and peace of mind. Please call us at 617-328-8600 to arrange an insurance consultation. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.

If you own a small manufacturing or service business, you most likely realize that equipment failure can lead to significant losses. To address this potential problem, insurance is available that will provide coverage in the event that your business' machinery and equipment should be damaged due to mechanical breakdown and other causes. Equipment Breakdown coverage will also cover the loss of business income that is related to the breakdown. While on the subject of business equipment, it may also be a good idea to look into Tools and Equipment coverage, which covers direct physical loss, damage, or theft to tools and equipment that you own or that are under your control. Businesses that rely on equipment should rely on equipment coverage.

NOTE: Equipment Breakdown coverage was once referred to as Boiler & Machinery Coverage.

Home Oxygen Use And Smoking

I had an opportunity to give a presentation the other day on home oxygen use and the hazards of smoking while using oxygen. The advantage of discussing such an issue in a group setting is the feedback which highlights misperceptions.

Meanwhile I just returned from a press conference on a new initiative by the State Fire Marshal on this very subject. In fact you'll be hearing and seeing a number of radio and TV public awareness announcements now and through the spring. It's become a serious enough issue that time and money will be spent on further educating the public about the hazards of home oxygen therapy.

As I've frequently written, home oxygen increases the risk of fires and burns. Within an oxygen-enriched atmosphere, fires will burn hotter and faster. When oxygen is used within a home, the oxygen content increases substantially within clothing, furnishings, hair, and any other porous substance. This significantly increases the rate at which a combustible will burn while making it much more susceptible to ignition in the first place. Even flame retardant material will burn in an oxygen-enriched atmosphere.

Thus it is important to keep home oxygen and tubing 10 feet away from heat sources. Matches, lighters, cigarettes, candles, gas stoves, appliances, electric razors, hair dryers and heaters take on a whole new potential within a home with oxygen therapy present. A household is filled with combustibles, while the potential for ignition of any one item, including clothing and hair, takes on a whole new meaning with oxygen present.

Therefore you must not smoke; it is the best thing you can do for your health and safety. If you feel you must, which is by no means recommended, disconnect the oxygen, wait 10 minutes, and go outside to smoke. This gives the oxygen present within clothing and hair some time to dilute in atmospheric air. Is this method foolproof, not entirely, but it's less risky than smoking indoors.

Because the practice of smoking and oxygen use is so hazardous, I am including a Massachusetts helpline to help one quit. The helpline offers free telephone counseling, information and referral services for Massachusetts residents who want to stop smoking. The number is 1-800-879-8678. Office hours are Mon. thru Thur. 9AM to 7PM and Fri., 9AM to 5PM.

Please do not adopt the optimistic wish that you can beat the smoking/oxygen use hazard. That thought process has killed many, while leaving others painfully burned. Be mindful of the increased fire hazard associated with oxygen use, and take every step to maintain a safe home while doing so.

Contact fire prevention with any questions you may have while we will direct you to material which you may find helpful on this subject. Our number is 617-376-1015. Thank you.

Robert Furtado's Teaching Legacy Lives On With Texas Tributary

When Robert Furtado was a boy, he used to spend many a summer day at the marsh near Manet Lake in Hough's Neck, collecting pails of water to view in wonderment the tiny organisms under his microscope.

Furtado always had a fascination with marshes, creeks, rivers and other bodies of water, along with the life they maintained. He went as far as keeping planarians – a type of flatworm that reproduces by dividing into pieces – as pets in his room.

"He brought home all kinds of bugs," said his mother, Ellie Furtado, "He was really into that stuff. He was always interested in the sciences. We lived near a marsh and he had a field day out there."

Robert's sister, Gail, remembers his passion for books and the outdoors. "He was into anything he could pull apart," she said. "He was very inquisitive as a kid growing up. He read a lot and studied a lot."

Robert's fascination with the environment as a child was a prelude to a distinguished teaching career.

Ellie wasn't the least bit surprised that Robert ultimately became a science teacher, sharing his passion with the students at the Broad Meadows School and then the Quincy Point Junior High School after graduating from Quincy High and earning degrees in education and biology from Boston State.

Sadly, Robert passed away on July 7, 2002 after suffering a heart attack. He was only 53 years old.

Robert's students, though, made it a point to see that his teaching legacy lived on. Teacher Of The Year four times in the Austin School District, Robert

Action Begins Monday At Quincy Youth Arena Austrian Team Featured In Kiwanis Hockey Tourney

By JOE REARDON

Eric Wood sat his Pee Wee A hockey squad down after practice last week to update them on what loomed ahead on their schedule. Wood could have saved his breath. And wasn't surprised his gritty team knew fully well what they were gearing towards.

The enormously popular Kiwanis International Hockey Tournament gets underway Feb. 15 and runs through the 21st at Quincy Arena. The tournament fields five teams in the Mite, Squirt, Pee Wee and Bantam divisions.

"I reminded them last night at practice that this is two weeks away and they were thrilled," said Wood. "It's an amazing tournament."

Among the towns competing are Weymouth, Duxbury, Braintree, Quincy, Milton, Barnstable, Franklin, Tri-County and Billerica. North Quincy is slated for a game, as is a team from the New England Developmental League (NECDL).

For the third year in a row, an Austrian squad made up of 22 players will be making the trip to compete, in the Bantam division this time around. Wood said it's a unique opportunity for both the Austrians and local kids to play against each other.

Friendships developed quickly last year. When Wood's squad won its division in the tourney with an overtime tally against Duxbury, the Austrian players in the stands celebrated with their American friends. "The Austrians jumped out on the ice and tackled all the players," said Wood. "It was the most amazing thing I've ever seen."

Wood was very impressed with the Austrians' style of play on the ice. "They're very disciplined and move very quickly to the puck," he said. "They've done very well the last two years."

Harald Springfield, who will be coaching the Austrian team, said the most telling difference in the styles of play between the Austrians and Americans is the physical nature of the American game.

"That's the reason we decide to come to the USA and Canada, to play some tournaments and games," Springfield said. "The players should collect as much experience they can get."

Springfield believes it is important for his players to work as teammates and live "the American way of life" and embrace the Americans' enthusiasm for the game.

The trips abroad to the US and Canada are valuable for the Austrian players because they are able to experience a different style of play from their own. The Bantam players selected are the 22 who have the best chance at being picked for the Olympic roster, which will play in the tournament during the first Youth Olympic Games that will be held in Austria in 2012.

The selection process is not done haphazardly. The players are scouted during camps and championship games. None of the players have been teammates more than three times. "Overall it's a lot of hard work to get all the players together," Springfield said. "Many lists and database entries are used. But it's good because we do it for the players."

Springfield said he has a strong relationship with Quincy Arena Manager Michelle Stenberg and that "she knows and understands the goals we have."

left a lasting impression on his students in the Austin Independent School District and Westlake High School in Texas, so much so that a tributary of Bull Creek was named "Furtado Creek" last October.

"I was ecstatic," said Ellie. "It thought it was really fabulous. He was one of a kind."

Regarded by the Bull Creek Foundation as the "Galapagos of Texas" the watershed area offers sights and sounds that are in direct contrast to the busy highway and growing communities abutting it.

The official resolution through the Travis County Commissioners Court and the United States Board on Geographic Names recognized Robert's help in establishing the Colorado River Watch Network in the late 1980s along with the River Watch program.

"Mr. Furtado taught his students in Travis County to understand and advocate for the health of local creeks and rivers and be responsible environmental citizens," the resolution read. "We, the Travis County Commissioners Court would like to recognize Robert A. Furtado for his devotion and loyalty to the teachings of environmental sciences."

A bench and plaque rest next to the tributary, honoring Robert's love of teaching.

Robert had unique and clever ways in explaining concepts to his students. In one class, he demonstrated the concept of protecting the earth, while at the same time mining the surface, by having his students excavate the raisins and nuts from a cookie while keeping it intact.

One student, who spoke at his memorial service in Austin, recounted how Robert would tape chapters of books because she had problems reading and would bring them to her house. More than 400 people, many of them former students, attended his memorial service and 30 of them spoke.

"He always went well beyond the normal duties of a teacher," said his sister, Gail Murphy, of Kingston.

In his support for the tribute to Robert, Travis County Judge Samuel T. Biscoe wrote to the U.S. Board on Geographic Names referring to him as "A well respected and much loved environmental scientist, teacher and mentor."

"For hundreds of students, his impacts as a teacher and mentor will be everlasting. Today, many former students credit him with helping them decide to pursue careers in science and biology."

Squad Leader William Fullerton

Quincy Paratrooper Receives Keys To New Motorcycle In Care Package

By Staff Sgt.
SUSAN WILT

BAGRAM AIRFIELD,
Afghanistan - Two deployed 82nd Airborne Division paratroopers got a nice surprise when they opened up a care package from Operation Gratitude and both found a set of keys to a new motorcycle.

U.S. Army Staff Sgt. William Fullerton, a squad leader with Company B, 82nd Division Special Troops Battalion, and U.S. Army Sgt. Michael Herne, an infantryman with Company A, 1st Battalion, 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team, 82nd Airborne Division, were each lucky recipients of a new Harley Davidson motorcycle that will be waiting for them upon their redeployment from Afghanistan.

"I'm still in shock from winning, so I'm a little lost for words. It's the coolest thing I've received in my life," said Herne, a native of Addison, N.Y.

Fullerton, a native of Quincy, was happy because his wife likes motorcycles, so it will be a nice treat for her.

The paratroopers weren't

QUINCY NATIVE and U.S. Army Staff Sgt. William Fullerton, a squad leader with Company B, 82nd Division Special Troops Battalion, reads a document revealing that he just received the keys to a new Harley Davidson motorcycle that he got in a care package from Operation Gratitude, Jan. 4. Fullerton was one of two Paratroopers to receive a motorcycle that were given by The American Veteran Travelling Tribute and Sands Resort as a way of saying, "thank you," to the two service members for their service.

U.S. ARMY Staff Sgt. William Fullerton, a squad leader with Company B, 82nd Division Special Troops Battalion, looks at the keys to his new Harley Davidson motorcycle that he received in a care package from Operation Gratitude, Jan. 4. Fullerton, a resident of Quincy, was one of two 82nd Airborne Division Paratroopers to receive a motorcycle given by the American Veteran Travelling Tribute and Sands Resorts as a way of saying, "thank you," to the service members for their service.

the only ones glad they'd received Harley's, their leadership was pleased to see their paratroopers get such a generous care package.

"Sergeant Herne is a very dedicated soldier," said 1st Sgt. Michael Black, Herne's company first sergeant. "When asked to perform a task he goes above and beyond his duty and always gives 110 percent."

"All the other paratroopers look up to him for guidance and mentorship. The day he came off of leave he volunteered to go on mission. That is the type of paratrooper Sergeant Herne is."

Fullerton's first sergeant echoed similar sentiments.

"He's one of my strongest [noncommissioned officers], an outstanding leader, very deserving of the motorcycle," said 1st Sgt. John S. Woodson, a Charleston, W.Va., native and Fullerton's first sergeant at Company B.

Not only was Woodson happy that Fullerton won a motorcycle, but he also thought the gesture showed there was a lot of outside support for service members who are deployed.

The two motorcycles were purchased by Don Allen, the CEO of American Veteran Travelling Tribute and Lee Rawcliffe, the CEO and owner of Sands Resorts, as a way of rewarding two Soldiers for all their service.

"Mr. Allen and Mr. Rawcliffe wanted to show their appreciation by asking Operation Gratitude to randomly select two soldiers to receive their gift," said retired Army Col. Melinda S. Woodhurst, the director of operations for AVTT.

Operation Gratitude is a non-profit organization that puts together care packages for service members who are deployed to Iraq or Afghanistan. As far as future plans go for the most recent recipient of the motorcycle, when Herne redeploys from Afghanistan he's looking forward to learning how to actually ride a motorcycle.

"I've ridden a lot of dirt bikes, so it should be the same," said Herne, who ironically was saving his money to buy a motorcycle when he returned from Afghanistan.

Even Love Letters Have Gone Digital

(ARA) - Though much has changed since the days of Shakespearean sonnets, love letters are still a personal and inexpensive way to show someone special you care this Valentine's Day.

Today, jobs, family and jam-packed schedules mean that not everyone has time to sit down and pen the perfect sonnet - which helps explain the recent trend of love letters going digital.

A recent survey of busy young professionals (ages 22-35) conducted by Microsoft indicates that more people are trading in calligraphy and scented stationery for e-mail and even text messages. In fact, 79 percent of busy young professionals surveyed have sent or received an e-mail love letter within the past two years, with more than 77 percent reporting that they love receiving e-mail love letters, since e-mail is their primary means of communication.

Sending a love letter online doesn't mean that it's less sincere or romantic than a handwritten note. In fact, there are major advantages to sending or receiving a love letter via e-mail, including the ability to refer back to it easily, and from anywhere.

With very large storage limits available through free e-mail providers like Windows Live Hotmail, it's especially simple to access an old love letter from any computer, a Web-equipped mobile phone, or print them out as a permanent keepsake. Courtesy of ARAcontent

Raspberry, Cranberry Nut Bars

When we were all at home, our mother was always baking. And always from scratch. One of her specialties was a fruit bar including figs or dates.

But since it's Valentine's Day Sunday, and wanting a pink or reddish tone, I've switched the recipe and made it with cranberries and raspberries. I think my mother would approve.

They can be made ahead of time and stored in the refrigerator.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees

CRANBERRY & RASPBERRY NUT BARS

¾ cup frozen cranberries

¾ cup frozen raspberries

1-cup sugar

2 large eggs

1-cup flour

4 tablespoons melted butter (or margarine)

½ cup chopped walnuts

Preheat oven to 350 degrees

In a bowl, beat the eggs until fluffy, and then add the sugar slowly and mix until well blended. Add the melted butter and the flour and blend well. Now add the cranberries, raspberries and the walnuts, mixing well until all is combined.

In a slightly greased baking pan, spread the mixture evenly.

Bake for 35-40 minutes until golden brown (insert a toothpick in the center and if it comes out clean the bars are done.) Cool and drizzle colored icing over the bars

ICING

¾ cup milk
Powdered sugar (start with a tablespoon)

Red food coloring (just a drop of two depending on how bright you want it)

The reason I didn't put the amount of powdered sugar is that I just add enough into the milk until it comes out a mixture that could be drizzled over the top of the bars.

Happy Valentine's Day!

Sacred Heart Parish To Host Children's Choir Festival March 20

Sacred Heart Parish in North Quincy, will host the third annual Children's Choir Festival of the Southeastern New England Chapter of Choristers Guild Saturday, March 20 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

More than 200 children are expected to participate. The call goes out for Quincy and neighboring community's church choir and directors to submit registration forms by Feb. 20.

The festival will begin with a complimentary and optional dinner for the children's choir directors Friday, March 19 at 6 p.m. followed by a special director's workshop from 7 to 9 p.m. led by Andrea Baxter, guest clinician.

Baxter serves as Associate Director for Music at Trinity Lutheran Church in Lansdale, Pa., where she directs two children's choirs and the youth choir, oversees the handbell program, and teaches preschool music. In 2007, she was selected by Choristers Guild as one of the five exceptional children's choir leaders in the nation.

The March 20th event will feature a day of music, fun, food and singing for the participating children. The day will conclude with a festival worship service in Sacred Heart Church at 6 p.m.

Church choirs need not be members of the Choristers Guild to join. The fee for the director's workshop is $20 per person. The fee for each participating child is $10, and includes the daylong workshop, meals, snacks, tee shirt, etc. Each participating choir must purchase music, and no photocopied music will be permitted.

Call Howard Lotis at Sacred Heart rectory at 617-328-8666 to discuss any financial concerns.

Registration forms, audio sample files, and up-to-date festival details are available at the parish website www.sacredheartquincy.org/cg.

Richard Sweeney III On Georgetown Dean's List

Richard Sweeney III of Quincy has been named to the Dean's List for the fall semester at Georgetown University.

Sweeney received Second Honors, with a GPA of 3.7 or above on a 4.0 scale. He was one of 1,110 students to achieve Second Honors.

Title I districts.

Half-day sessions are held Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays.

Three local elementary school districts qualify for Title I program. The eligible districts are Snug Harbor Elementary School, Clifford Marshall Elementary School, and the Della Chiesa Early Childhood Center.

The program for Clifford Marshall students is held at the Snug Harbor Elementary School.

Children who live in non-Title I districts in the city are eligible for the citywide Integrated Pre-Kindergarten Program. There is a tuition fee for this program which is held at the Snug Harbor Elementary School. Appointments may be scheduled by calling 617-984-8951.

In conjunction with the program and consistent with the Special Education Act. Quincy Public Schools conducts a screening of three and four-year old children in order to identify those who have special needs.

Appointments for the screenings for students in the district covering the Della Chiesa Early Childhood Center may be scheduled by calling 617-984-8777.

All other appointments, including special needs screenings, will be scheduled through the Snug Harbor School by calling 617-984-8951.

Something Special For Your Valentine

As The Relationship Changes, So Do The Valentine's Day Gifts

(ARA) - Do red roses mean more than you're willing to admit?

Does the jewelry you're giving your loved one send the correct message?

What is the appropriate gift to show your mother that you love her on Valentine's Day?

As the holiday of love quickly approaches, many of us are trying to find the right gifts for our loved ones.

For new couples, maybe a gift of red roses in full bloom, which means "I love you," isn't what the man is ready to give, or the woman is ready to receive.

For couples who have been together for a long time, a lasting gift like a living plant might convey your love better than cut flowers, which wilt quickly and then are thrown away.

Here are some tips to determine what gifts might work well for your relationship.

A new relationship

- Spending time together and discovering new talents is what makes a new relationship so exciting. Consider cooking a special meal for the two of you to enjoy together, or make a favorite food item for your sweetheart, like brownies or a cake.

- Flowers work for any relationship. If you aren't ready to go the red roses route, consider an arrangement of her favorite type of flower, or roses in her favorite color.

Still in the honeymoon stage

After you've known each other for a while, and enjoy spending every waking minute together, you start to pick up on your partner's personal tastes. An extra level of thoughtfulness is conveyed through the giving of a creative and specialized gift.

- Jewelry gifts provide a beautiful way to show how much you care. Diamonds are a traditional favorite for expressing a long-lasting message of love, but other gemstones may be a better fit for the current phase of your relationship.

For example, if you want to promote your faithfulness, weaving sapphires into your gift would be a brilliant idea. You can check out what's available in your local stores. Be sure to leave extra time for delivery if you choose a personalized gift.

- Cologne and perfume also make excellent Valentine's Day gifts. You can refresh your loved one's supply easily by shopping online - just make sure to look for coupon codes for free shipping or an extra discount.

Happily ever after

- Valentine's Day is the perfect opportunity for established couples to reconnect, and giving your loved one a gift that inspires a memory from happy times in your relationship works well. For example, consider finding a bottle of the wine or champagne you drank on your first date, or at your wedding.

- Being comfortable with each other is what works for happily-ever-after couples. Consider booking a couple's massage, so you can both enjoy the gift of time spent together in blissful relaxation.

Best friends forever

- Finding a non-romantic gift for your best friend doesn't have to be difficult.

Just pay attention to their special interests and cater to them. For example, browse the bookstore for a copy of their favorite book. Or if they're into sporting events, think about getting tickets to an upcoming home game or a jersey shirt as a gift.

- Family members will appreciate gifts that bring back memories of time spent together. If you're creative, a scrapbook of time spent with your mom would make a wonderful gift. Or a digital photo frame preloaded with family photos will put a smile on your dad's face.

Of course, it's easy to show how much you care this Valentine's Day. A simple hug will go a long way. Courtesy of ARAcontent

(ARA) - Finding gifts for a confident man isn't always easy, especially since he already projects such strong characteristics. But by giving him a stylish gift this Valentine's Day that works with, or even enhances, his confident personality, you can't go wrong.

Here are some suggestions to make this Valentine's Day something perfect:

- Give him a fragrance that reflects his style and turn up the heat on romance. The right fragrance will not only accentuate his confidence it will keep you both warm over the winter months. The Usher VIP fragrance is constructed around a rich suede note, a combination of fresh clean bergamot, tangerine and kumquat and allows a man to radiate the confidence of a gentleman at ease in his own skin. Usher VIP fragrance is also found in a shower gel, after shave soother and deodorant.

- Of course, style is very important for confident men, and you can always find him the best winter outdoor wear that not only keeps him warm, but also allows him to still be sexy. Consider cashmere scarves, leather gloves or even a hat that you know will bring out that special look in his eyes when he tilts it just slightly on his head.

- * Plan a fun date for the two of you that he will enjoy. If he's into a sports team, think about getting tickets to a big home game, and include a meal or dessert as part of the bargain. Maybe find some front row tickets to a concert for the music lover. Or plan a hike with a romantic picnic included. Surf and turf dinners are also a popular favorite, whether you cook them yourself or take him out to a fancy restaurant.

This Valentine's Day, you can't strike out by giving him a strong gift to match his personality. Look for Usher VIP fragrance at department stores nationwide. Courtesy of ARAcontent

Conway Real Estate Tops Business List

The Jack Conway Co. has again topped the statewide list for most sales in a year.

The list, compiled by the Boston Business Journal, indicates the Norwell-based Realtor organization was the No. 1 statewide for all private independently-owned firms.

The report showed that Conway closed more than 2,000 deals in 2009, first among independents and second to a nationwide franchise group.

"We have always prided ourselves on our independence," said Chairman Jack Conway.

"We have had many offers to sell to franchise organizations, but have felt we are happier and more fulfilled if we stay as a privately-owned company."

Conway, who intends to stay in that role, has turned over the actually day-to-day leadership to his daughter, Carol Bulman, who has filled the CEO role.

The Conway Co. continues to be a truly family-owned and family-controlled company. The firm has 41 sales centers in Boston and Southeastern Mass. Conway Co. was recently listed as the 69th largest real estate sales company in the United States.

"We have a longstanding tradition of service to our customers and our 700-plus agents are proud of their achievements," said Carol Bulman.

Bulman has been with the firm since 1983 and over the years has served as President of the Mass. Mortgage Association, a member of the Residential Council of Mass. Housing Association and is a recently-elected director of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. She is a graduate of Cohasset High School and Providence College and she and her husband, Michael, live in Scituate with their family.

Jack Conway Co. is celebrating its 54th anniversary as the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts. The firm also operates its own mortgage company, Conway Home Mortgage.

Stripping Screws Drives Wedge in Relationship

Q. My boyfriend always strips screws whenever he tries to screw them into a stud. He does this with nuts as well, even when we're just tightening them, he insists on tackling the nut after me and tightens it until the metal strips away. He tells me that they have to be on tight, especially when installing heavy shelves, and that stripping the screws or nuts just happens sometimes. Is he right?

— Jane T., Oshkosh, Wis.

A. Come on! You know that's not right, especially if he's stripping every screw in sight. Eventually you may want to remove or replace some of the items you've installed on your walls. Has your boyfriend explained how he's going to unscrew those stripped screws and nuts?

The No. 1 problem your boyfriend is probably having is that he's using the wrong size bit for his screwdriver. It's too small for the job. The bit should snugly fit in the grooves of the screw head.

He also should make sure the pilot holes he's drilling prior to placing the screws are not too small. Sometimes getting the correct size is difficult, so both of you should practice drilling pilot holes and installing screws on a spare two-by-four.

The thing with stripping the nuts, however, is almost unforgivable. I'm no psychologist, but there's a real trust issue going on with this. He thinks you're not tightening them enough, so he walks up and demonstrates his manly brawn by stripping all the corners off a nut.

Again, both of you need to use the right size wrench for the job. A quality socket wrench is preferable, and it should slide snugly around the nut, with no wiggle room. Tighten it just until you (not your boyfriend!) cannot tighten it anymore. If the connection or installation remains loose after you've tightened the nut, then something is wrong with the connection, not the nut. Abusing the poor nut won't fix the problem — check the entire screw assembly.

HOME TIP: Steel screws, rather than brass, are recommended for screwing into studs, as they are less likely to strip under pressure.

-Lt. Dan Minton

On Wednesday, January 27, at approximately 7 p.m., Detectives Coen and O'Brien of the Quincy Police Drug Control Unit were conducting surveillance in the West Quincy Area.

Detective Coen was watching a female standing in front the Seven Eleven Store on Copeland Street. Soon after, a vehicle pulled into the lot and the female got in. The suspect vehicle drove to the area of Common and Reardon Streets, then rode around the block twice before parking in the driveway of a home located nearby.

Moments later, a white Lincoln Town Car drove down the street and then stopped. The female jumped out of the suspect vehicle and into the Town Car. The Town Car drove a very short distance and after stopping, within a period of 20 seconds, the female got out of the car and walked back towards Reardon Street.

The detectives, based on their experience, knew that the actions were consistent with street level drug sales. The detectives, in separate unmarked cruisers, followed the Town Car as it traveled up Quarry Street to the Avalon Summit Apartment Complex.

The car then turned around after doing a loop and drove down Quarry Street in the opposite direction it had just come from. This maneuver is often used by drug dealers to detect police surveillance. The Town Car then went to the Highpoint Apartment complex and did a loop in the parking lot.

The detectives then decided to stop the suspect vehicle as it was approaching them. Detective O'Brien stood in front of the suspect vehicle, with badge displayed and announced "Quincy Police" to the two occupants of the vehicle. The driver, suspect #1, put the vehicle in reverse and then drove away, unaware that Detective Coen's vehicle was behind them.

Detective O'Brien approached the driver's side door and told the driver to put the car in park. The driver failed to comply immediately and appeared to be looking for an escape route, so Detective O'Brien opened the driver's door and continued to order the driver to put the car in park. The driver then complied. The driver was asked what he was doing and he stated that he was looking for a place to eat. When asked where he was coming from and where he lived, he said, "Dorchester."

Detective Coen then read the driver his Miranda Rights to which he stated he understood. He also denied stopping or meeting with anyone prior to being stopped by the police. Detective Coen had the driver step from the vehicle and then conducted a pat frisk, finding three cell phones. With a fourth cell phone in the vehicle, the Detectives asked the driver why he had four cell phones and he replied, "What - I can't have cell phones?" The cell phones were ringing constantly.

When asked why he was driving around the apartment complexes, the driver said, "I'm looking for an apartment for his mother." The driver was asked about the female who got in and out of his vehicle but he continued to deny that he had picked anyone up. Detective Coen then received word from Quincy Communications that the driver had recently been arrested for firearm and drug distribution charges in Boston. The Detectives told the driver that they believed he was involved in a drug deal. The driver did not deny their statement, responding by saying, "Am I going to away (referring to jail)?" Detective O'Brien began to search the vehicle and as he approached the glove box, Detective Coen observed the driver to become very nervous and talkative as if to distract the search. Detective O'Brien noted that the front panel covering the air bag looked to be loose. Officer William O'Neill arrived on scene in a marked police cruiser and detained the driver in his cruiser. The Detectives examined the area between the climate control panel and the dashboard and found a semi-automatic handgun concealed within the vehicles dashboard. Detective O'Brien told the driver he wanted to see his License to Carry a Firearm. The driver did not respond. Detective Coen removed the faceplate surrounding the climate control panel which revealed a false compartment in the dashboard, containing a loaded Kahr 40 caliber semi-automatic handgun and a yellow cloth and a plastic bag containing a brown powder substance believed to be heroin. Officer O'Neill transported the driver to the station for booking. A check of the handgun's serial number showed that it was stolen from Westwood, Massachusetts. The firearm was placed into evidence and will be forwarded to the State Police Crime Lab to be analyzed for DNA, Fingerprints, and Ballistics. The suspect had a total of $290.00 dollars in small bills, believed to be involved in illegal drug sales. The cash and four cell phones were taken as part of the civil forfeiture process. The motor vehicle was taken back to the Quincy Police Department, where it was further searched by Officer Brian Mahoney and his Narcotics K-9 and Lieutenant Robert Gillan and his Explosives and Firearms detecting K-9. Both K-9 handlers stated their K-9s alerted in the area of the dashboard near the climate control panel, where the gun and drugs were found. The suspect, a 19 year old Dorchester resident, was charged with "Possession of a Firearm Without a License, Illegal Possession of Ammunition, Possession of a Firearm During the Commission of a Felony, Receiving Stolen Property Over $250.00, and Possession of a Class A With Intent to Distribute." The suspect was brought before the court, who instituted a $15,000 bail. Within hours, the suspect was out on bail.

STUDENTS COUNT the toys and put their math skills to work by putting them in piles of tens to get the final count. The final tally was more than 110 toys.

MEMBERS OF TEAMSTERS Local 25 donated their time and came to pick up the toys which were later delivered to the Toys for Tots headquarters.

DoodyCalls Quincy Franchise Honored

Milton residents Paul and Angela Delaney, owners of the DoodyCalls pet waste removal franchise in Quincy, have received the franchisor's "Franchise of the Year" for the second year in a row.

Mr. and Mrs. Delaney were recognized at the DoodyCalls Annual Convention held in Washington, D.C., for the 2009 season. Mr. and Mrs. Delaney won the award in 2008 as well.

DoodyCalls "Franchise of the Year" recognizes the franchise owners who demonstrates the following:

- Unwavering leadership and commitment to the DoodyCalls brand.
- Consistently presents their franchise in a professional manner.
- Assists others within the DoodyCalls franchise family in the growth and acquisition of skills and best practices.

Armed with rakes, shovels and bags, DoodyCalls team members address those unpleasant and time-consuming aspect of pet ownerships: picking up where pets "drop off." In addition to residential services, DoodyCalls also provides pet waste stations and services to homeowners association, condo and apartment complexes parks and municipalities to keep common areas clean, disinfected and safe.

Quincy Community United Methodist To Host Own 'Olympics' Feb. 27

On Saturday, Feb. 27, the "Olympic Games" will come to Quincy-in a way.

Quincy Community United Methodist Church will hold its own version of the "Olympics."

The Rev. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor said, "It all grew out of a combination of 'cabin fever' and wanting to have fun." People in the congregation of all ages have volunteered to be members of various teams named after mythical countries such as "Fredonia" from the Marx Brothers' movie and 'Elbonia' from the comic strip, Dilbert.

"They've designed their own 'uniforms' and 'flags' and are ready to compete in games like the marshmallow toss," she added.

The event will begin with a potluck supper followed by the "Parade of the Athletes" the lighting of the "Olympic Torch" and the "Games" themselves. Medals will be awarded to the winning teams.

"The 'games' are not meant to demean the real Olympics in any way, but simply an opportunity for people of all ages to come together and have a good time" said Rev. Jarek Glidden.

The church is located at 40 Beale St., and is handicapped accessible. For more information, call the church office at 617-773-3319.

Triple Church Celebration Sunday

Because Valentine's Day is on a Sunday this year, The Worship Committee and Sunday School Committees at the Quincy Community United Methodist Church are working together and planned a worship service based on two books.

The younger students are reading Heartprints, and junior and senior high school students are reading Three Cups of Tea. "Both books are based on how a person's commitment to live, compassion and peace can change the world," said Rev. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of the church.

The worship service begins at 10:30 a.m.

In addition, Feb. 14 is also the last Sunday prior to the start of Lent.

During the worship service, Sunday School students will bring baskets of pretzels into the sanctuary and pass the out to everyone, commemorating "Pretzel Sunday."

The church is on 40 Beale St. and is handicapped accessible at the front door nearest the flagpole.

For more information, call 617-773-3319.

Division II Tournament In Play

Quincy Presidents Inch Closer To Playoffs

By SEAN BRENNAN

A 2-1 week has put the Quincy Presidents within one victory of qualifying for the Division II playoffs; the team needs one win over its final two games to make the cut.

Quincy (9-9 overall, 7-7 in Patriot League) played Rockland High School on Tuesday night and will play on the road tonight (Thursday) against Middleborough High School. The Presidents lost to Rockland, 42-30 on Jan. 5, but the team defeated Middleborough, 71-24, on Jan. 8.

"We have really started to come back together as a team as we close out the regular season," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch. "Our defense has improved and it has gotten much better. The team is making progress. The seniors have continued to lead the way and you can start to see the progression of some of our younger players.

"We need to get to that ten win mark. I feel confident that we are going to get there as we have already defeated Middleborough by 40 points earlier this season."

The Presidents inched closer to that elusive post-season spot with an impressive showing last week in a trio of Patriot League games.

On Feb. 1, the team dispatched of Pembroke High School, 71-30, matching their highest point total of the season (reached against Middleborough back in January). Senior captain Leslie Campbell led all scorers with 16 points. Also filling up the stat sheet were sophomores Kiley McDonald (14 points) and Kaity Lowry (nine points), junior Christina Cahill (four points) and seniors Colleen Tobin (eight points) and Olivia Berry (seven points).

"We jumped out to an 22-5 lead and just never looked back," said Bretsch. "Everybody on the roster scored. It was one of our best games of the season and a great way to start the week."

In the middle game, Quincy took league championship Hanover High School to the final buzzer, but, unfortunately, the Presidents could not finish, and lost a heartbreaker, 50-48.

Campbell poured in 20 points, McDonald added ten points and 12 rebounds and junior point guard Kori Sorensen chipped in with eight points, in a game that was not decided until Hanover converted on a layup with six seconds left in regulation.

"It was a good game," said Bretsch about his team's effort against one of the Patriot League's best teams. "We trailed by as many as 12 points in the third quarter, but we came back to tie the game with 40 seconds left to go in regulation. Unfortunately we missed some chances late to take the lead and Hanover scored the game-winner with time running out.

"Despite losing, I thought we played the league championship really well. We had our shots and they just didn't fall. But, overall, it was a good game played by my team."

The Presidents wrapped up their two-win week with a gusty 64-47 victory over Randolph High School on Feb. 5. Campbell scored 18 points, McDonald finished with a double-double (16 points, 12 rebounds) and Tobin scored ten points, collected eight rebounds and dished out five assists.

"The game was tied, at one point, 26-26, but we responded and finished them off," said Bretsch. "That was a big win for us. It puts us in a great position to finish the year with ten wins. That is the goal and we have a real good opportunity to make it back to the postseason."

Has Led Quincy Hockey for 44 Years

QHS Bob Sylvia To Coach Last Game Feb. 17

Quincy High School's Bob Sylvia will coach his last game behind the bench for the Presidents boys' hockey team on Feb. 17 in a Patriot League contest against Hanover High School.

Sylvia, who has been the head honcho at QHS since 1965 (44 years), is retiring from high school hockey coaching at the end of this season. His last regular season game, to be played on Feb. 17 at 7:10 p.m. at the Quincy Youth Arena, will be against his brother, Jim Sylvia, who is the head coach at Hanover HS.

Bob Sylvia played college hockey at Boston University (1961-65) before coming to Quincy in 1965. He and his brother, Jim, the head coach at Hanover HS since the 1973-74 season, are both members of the Massachusetts Association of Hockey Coaches Hall of Fame.

The following are words of appreciation about Coach Bob Sylvia from QHS coach Teddy Walsh:

"As I reflect back on my 20 years of coaching Quincy High School hockey with Bob Sylvia, I often wondered how anyone could coach 44 years? It's a question to most of us that is unthinkable and unattainable. Most people retire from their job after 30 years, however if you really had the privilege of getting to know Syl as I have, the answer is obvious. Bob Sylvia, known to the hockey world as Syl is the most passionate hockey man I have ever been associated with. Syl is not just an in-season coach, Syl coaches hockey year-round from high school through pro offering a wealth of knowledge to anyone who has ever played for him. I have had the unique opportunity of associating with him on different levels, first as a player, then as an assistant coach, and finally as the coach of my two boys. As a player you always knew he was in your corner showing passion and tough love to his boys.

"As assistant he simply made coaching fun to come to work everyday often offering me a helping hand or great advice. As a dad, I knew my boys were playing for a legend and I was proud of that. The way I judge a man is by his family and his body of work throughout the years. Syl has one of the most cohesive, loving families I have ever met, always there to support him, especially his wife Karen. We as coaches sometimes have the easy part on Wednesday and Saturday nights when we are behind the bench coaching because it's what we love, but behind every coach has to be a great and understanding woman; that describes Karen Sylvia.

"Syl's body of work is something special, he has wins, losses, many tournament appearances, state final appearances, the tragedy of Matthew Messing, and was always able to maintain control of any situation. He was recently inducted into the MA Hockey High School Hall of Fame, which was a great honor and well deserved.

"As Syl's friend and assistant coach, the greatest compliment I can give him is the fact that through the thousands of players and 44 seasons, Syl protected the integrity of the game of hockey, which will be around forever and better because of Bob Sylvia touched it and can now walk away, look you in the eye, and proudly say, (as the lyrics go), 'I did it my way.'"

A junior varsity game will kick off the festivities at 6 p.m., followed by the varsity game at 7:10 p.m.

QRD Announces Vacation Gym Schedule

The Quincy Recreation Department and Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation, announced on Tuesday that the QRD would be conducting an expanded schedule of supervised gym programs during next week's February school vacation.

Local gyms will be supervised from 9 a.m. until 12 Noon for free activities for boys and girls ages eight through high school; school gyms will be open in all neighborhoods of the city and will feature activities such as basketball, floor hockey, gym games and dodge ball.

Registration will be conducted at each location and participants ages eight through Grade 5 will attend from 9-10:30 a.m. Youths in Grade 6 through Grade 12 will attend from 10:30 a.m. until 12 Noon. Participants may attend the program of their choice. Some minor changes in times may occur in some locations to accommodate differences in enrollment.

In addition to the day schedules, the QRD's ongoing night gym programs will also be conducted in selected locations and all Saturday morning programs will be held on Feb. 13 and Feb. 20; participants are requested to wear sneakers at all locations.

These free activities, which are well received by many of Quincy's working parents, are part of "Quincy On the Go!" programs that are designed to promote beneficial active lifestyles among Quincy youths, according to Barry J. Welch, Director of Recreation.

The following are a list of the February School Gym schedules and locations:

Tuesday, Feb. 16 (9 a.m. to Noon)

Atherton Hough, Beechwood Knoll, Bernazzani, Merrymount, Montclair, Snug Harbor, Squantum, Wollaston, Atlantic and Point Webster.

Night programs will be held at Atherton Hough (5-7 p.m.), Snug Harbor (5-8 p.m.), Squantum (5-8 p.m.) and Point Webster (5-8 p.m.).

Q/NQ's Taryn Urbanus Captures One-Meter Title

Quincy/North Quincy sophomore Taryn Urbanus won the one-meter diving competition at the Patriot League Diving Championships, held Feb. 5 at the Lincoln Hancock Pool.

The sophomore diver earned 376.80 points in the 11-dive competition.

Earlier this season, Urbanus prevailed in four of the five diving meets in which she competed. Her only second-place finish came against Nikki Delorey of the Hanover/Rockland swimming and diving squad on Jan. 12.

Urbanus bettered her own six-dive school record on Jan. 5 when Q/NQ triumphed over Silver Lake Regional HS, 50-39, but fell to Duxbury HS, 57-43. Urbanus's third dive, a forward, two-and-one-half somersault, tuck position, which garnered a seven and six-and-one-half from the judges, helped to complete the sophomore's first place and set a new Quincy High School mark of 234 points.

As a member of the South Shore Diving Club, under the tutelage of head coach Craig Dolloff; Urbanus has already qualified for the 2010 Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) Diving National Championships.

She will next compete for the Quincy/North Quincy team in the Central/South Sectionals on Feb. 13 at M.I.T.

Urbanus was followed in the rankings by Nikki Delorey (second place, Hanover/Rockland), Samantha Tougas (third place, Duxbury), Jessica Delorey (fourth place, Hanover/Rockland), Katlyne Dalton Shepard (fifth place, Middleboro), Nora Happ (sixth place, Hingham), Megan MacKinnon (seventh place, Duxbury) and Keleigh Grinham (eighth place, Middleboro).

Middle School Volleyball Tourney Held At NQHS Central Middle School Boys, Girls Repeat As Champs

The annual Quincy Public School Middle School Volleyball Tournament was held recently at North Quincy High School, and, the Central Middle School boys and girls' teams repeated as champions again this winter.

The day of volleyball started out with a Wild Card matchup between the Sterling Middle School and Point Webster Middle School girls' teams. Point Webster prevailed 23-21, 11-21 and 16-14. Rodelyn Las played great defense for Point Webster and Taylor Perry, Markiah Monteiro, Tiara Jones and Jenay Cedrone played well for Sterling MS.

In the girls' semifinals, Central MS defeated Broadmeadows 21-18, 21-16. Jane Minton served well for Central and Emma Kelly passed consistently to allow teammate Lauren Magoon to attack the ball. Courtney Ryan and Marlena Forrester played well for Broadmeadows.

In the other girls' semifinal game, Atlantic MS defeated Point Webster MS, 21-13, 21-7 to advance to the championship match. Maya Umoren was the top server for Atlantic MS and Emma Papile served well for Point Webster MS.

The girls' final was an exciting matchup between Central MS and Atlantic MS. In the end, Central edged out Atlantic, 23-21, 22-20 to take the title. Carolyn Schwartz, Molly Meehan and Stephanie DiPietro all played well for the Central Rams in the championship game. Nancy Huang and Leah Prasinos played well for Atlantic MS.

In the boys' Wild Card matchup, Central Middle School faced Broadmeadows Middle School; Central pulled off the upset behind 17 straight points from Brian Sullivan. Jackie Chan also played well for Central MS.

In the first boys' semifinal game, Atlantic MS faced off against Sterling MS. Atlantic won 23-21, 21-12. Anthony Green led the offense for Atlantic and Jia Zhou and Nick Kaplan played good games for Sterling MS.

In the second semifinal game, top-seeded Point Webster played the fifth seeded Central Rams; Central topped Point Webster to earn a trip to the championship game. Michael Bina played well for Central MS.

Matt Kozlowski and Shamus Hill-Torres had great games serving, setting and hitting for Point Webster MS.

In the boys' championship match, Central defeated Atlantic, 18-21, 21-18, 15-9. Vincent Tran and Kyle Richardson played well for Central and Antoine Allen played well for Atlantic.

Beth Houghton coached the Central MS girls' team and Kerry Duffy coached the Central MS boys' team.

Over 130 middle school student-athletes enjoyed another successful season playing on Quincy Public Schools-Middle School volleyball teams this winter.

Freshman At Newbury College

Quincy's Catherine O'Connell Earning Accolades

Catherine O'Connell, a 2009 graduate of North Quincy High School, and currently a freshman at Newbury College, is making a name for herself and rewriting the record book, on the basketball court this winter for the Nighthawks.

O'Connell wrote a new history last week for Newbury College; she earned both the NECC Player of the Week and Rookie of the Week along with the NEWBA (New England Women's Basketball Association) Rookie of the Week and the Division III Team of the Week, becoming the first Newbury College women's basketball player to ever be named to all four awards in a single week and the first women's player to be named to the Division III Team of the Week in school history.

"Catherine has been extraordinary for us this season," said Newbury College head coach Katherine Greene. "She has stepped in and is playing better than most of our seniors. The awards that she earned, no one had ever done that at Newbury College. She was under-the-radar as a high school player, but she is a player that you can build a program around."

During her record-setting week, O'Connell erupted for 18.5 points and 21 per game as the Nighthawks finished with a 1-1 record. O'Connell, the team's center, converted 59% (16-of-27) of her attempts from the field and also added three blocked shots. Her first double-double of the week came in a 62-61 win over Rivier College. The Nighthawks were trailing 61-60 in the final seconds when O'Connell knocked down a pair of free throws to propel Newbury College to its first win over Rivier College in five years.

O'Connell finished with 18 points, 19 rebounds, four steals and two blocked shots in the victory.

O'Connell then tallied 19 points and a career-best 23 rebounds in the Nighthawks' 73-68, loss to NECC Conference leaders Daniel Webster College.

In NCAA Division III, O'Connell is currently ranked third in the nation and first in the NECC for rebounds per game with 15.2. With eight regular season games left, she stands with 213 rebounds and 197 points on the year.

The list of accolades and accomplishments for Catherine O'Connell, so far this season, include: NECC Rookie of the Week (five times), NECC Player of the Week (one time), NEWBA Rookie of the Week (one time), Division III Team of the Week (one time, center). She has finished with a double-double in 13 out of 15 games and is currently fifth in the NECC in scoring and first in the NECC in rebounding.

Raiders Still In Running For Playoffs

Following a 58-53 victory over Silver Lake High School last Friday night, the North Quincy Red Raiders still have a slim chance of advancing to the postseason.

North Quincy (7-9 overall) has four games remaining on the schedule and needs to win three-out-of-four to advance on. The team played Duxbury HS on Tuesday night and is scheduled to play at Scituate HS tonight (Thursday).

Against the Lakers, North Quincy senior captain Johnathan Coates scored a game-high 25 points; grabbed nine rebounds and finished with five steals. He connected on four three-pointers (13 points) in the second quarter while fellow senior Ned Gould chipped in with four points as the Raiders grabbed a first half advantage.

Fellow captain, senior Mike Stanton, finished the game with 14 points and 12 rebounds, including eight points in the third quarter.

The Raiders broke a late fourth quarter tie on a beautiful give-and-go from Coates to sophomore Tim Liuzzo (five points). Liuzzo made the layup and converted a free throw to complete a three-point play. Senior Matt Jayne made two free throws late to seal the victory for North Quincy.

Senior Chris Delaney finished the contest with six points.

The Raiders will play a make-up game against Whitman-Hanson HS on Feb. 18. This game was canceled due to an incident at NQHS last week.

Note: Johnathan Coates and Mike Stanton were recently named to the Patriot League All-Star team.

Allergy Season: How To Get Relief

(ARA) - As the winter snow melts, the long-awaited sun seems to shine a little longer and that's when the buds-to-blossom routine begins. For many allergy sufferers, however, the beauty of spring means running immediately to the nearest drugstore to pick up a few extra boxes of tissues and maybe a box of antihistamines.

Environmental changes are often tagged as the culprits that cause allergies because they introduce some guilty particle to our biological systems, causing our bodies to react negatively, and we want to take guard. The distress seems to be brought on by nature, or we blame an adorable pet.

John Sheffield, assistant professor of Physician Assistant Studies at South University, worked as a physician assistant in the Army, and he has seen a lot of combat against the body's struggle with allergens. He currently teaches courses on allergy and immunology, and diseases of the head and neck at South University's campus in Savannah, Ga.

"Generally people with allergies understand how they evolve. A trigger, or what we call an allergen, enters the body and causes a symptom," Sheffield explains. "So, when the nose starts running, the eyes start watering or a skin rash appears, what we really want to know then is how can I stop this?"

We want to understand why our bodies feel they are under attack, and we want to figure out how we can be free of whatever plagues our respiratory system. Genetics and environment are traditionally fingered as the culprits and, in some cases, the solutions to understanding allergic reactions. Since allergies are clearly a cause-and-effect reality, a natural tendency is to start to examine the problem from the outside in.

"Timing is very important," Sheffield says. "Pay attention if you are having an allergic response and notice if the reaction happens at a specific time of the year. Simple observation can help narrow down a probable allergen, especially when it comes to seasonal allergies."

"Drinking alcohol and smoking is common, and whether you directly participate or not, we all experience to some degree the effects of toxicity on our planet. This exposure to chemical agents that can cause allergies also predisposes us to cancers of the head, throat, mouth, voice box and sinuses," he explains.

With this thought in mind, allergists to holistic healers typically recommend the best approach to long-term relief is avoidance. The natural healing process often requires avoiding highly processed foods, alcohol, tobacco and other direct or indirect toxins the body ingests from the environment. Often, health care practitioners will urge the avoidance of the allergen itself. However, given poor air quality and other toxins in the environment, personal avoidance of allergens can become a nearly impossible recourse for the average person.

"When you are suffering and need instant relief, what works the quickest and what most allergists will prescribe readily these days are antihistamines and steroid nasal sprays. A quick dose of steroids has become a cornerstone of therapy to decrease inflammation in the nose almost immediately where the chain reaction of events begins," Sheffield continues. "This type of therapy brings the patient complete and almost instant relief even though it may be temporary. The sneezing, runny nose, watery eyes, itching and rashes, all the signs that an allergen has created greater inflammation within, is stifled until the next round."

So, what can we do to prevent "the next round?" Build immunity. This is why allergists prescribe taking controlled doses, or injections, of the allergen in order to mount a defense within the body so it no longer reacts to the allergy-causing agent in a violent manner. Alternative healing methods recommend detoxifying the liver, the internal organ where many allergy-causing toxins in the body reside and go to be eliminated.

Ultimately with allergies, lowering susceptibility to the allergen through avoidance and a healthier lifestyle will keep us moving and breathing without agony through life's seasonal changes. Consult with a physician prior to taking medication or beginning any manner of allergy treatment.

than your heart. That position empties blood out of leg veins. Admittedly, you can't spend the entire day with your legs elevated, but elevate them as often as you can. Never stand for long in one place. If you have to stay still, contract your calf and leg muscles to push blood out of the legs.

Should you change your mind about surgical vein removal, you should know that today there are many methods of getting rid of these veins. Endovascular lasers, radiofrequency catheters and sclerotherapy are recent-vintage techniques. Surgical removal has been refined to the point that most patients return home on the day of operation.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have mucus that drains down into my mouth and throat constantly. I hope you can offer some help for me. -H.E.

ANSWER: You're describing postnasal drip, the irksome trickling of mucus into the back of the mouth and throat. It is thick, gluey and tastes awful. The mucus often comes from chronically infected sinuses.

Try saltwater irrigation of the nose to clear up some of this mucus. Boil some water, and into a cup of boiling water add a quarter-teaspoon of salt. Let the water cool. With a bulb syringe, available in drugstores, gently flush both nostrils.

Before going to bed, take a drug that contains both an antihistamine and a decongestant. Drisoral Cold and Allergy Tablets is one such drug. It can slow the trickle at night, when it's usually at its worst.

You might have to enlist the help of an ear, nose and throat doctor, who can inspect your sinuses and tell you if you need more intensive treatment.

Don't Just Sit There

Even if we exercise regularly, too many hours in front of the television can be detrimental to our health. There's apparently a link between watching television and dying of cardiovascular disease.

The culprit? Sitting. Apparently while we're sitting there, our bodies are mishandling fats and sugars from our diet. There's a link between muscle movement and "lipoprotein lipase" in the bloodstream. Not using muscles allows that enzyme to temporarily shut down, which in turn lets more of the bad cholesterol get a foothold in the bloodstream. This is true, even if we're not overweight.

According to the Australian Diabetes, Obesity and Lifestyle Study, if we watch more than four hours a day of television, we're 46 percent more likely to die, period. We're 80 percent more likely to die of cardiovascular disease than people who sit in front of a television for less than two hours a day. The more hours, the more risk.

The study ran for 10 years, and the average age of the participant was 50 years old.

The people in the study said they already exercised a half hour or more per day. What are we to do, then? Getting out of the recliner seems to be the only answer. A treadmill in the living room might not be lovely for the decor, but when it comes to saving our health, it could help. Even standing up and lifting a few hand weights while watching television could be beneficial.

There's an additional dilemma here: If it's "sitting" that causes the problem, then television can't be the only culprit. What about people who sit at computers for a living? Or customer-service people who are hooked to a headset (while sitting in a chair) for eight hours a day?

One way or the other, we have to find ways to move more than we do.

GOOD ORAL HEALTH PROMOTES CLEAR THINKING

There is already research that links gum disease with heart disease, stroke, diabetes, and Alzheimer's disease. Now, a recent study suggests that gum disease may also be associated with poorer thinking skills. Researchers found that adults aged 60 and older with the highest levels of the gum disease-causing pathogen Porphyromonas gingivalis were three times more likely to experience trouble recalling a three-word sequence over time than those with lower levels of the pathogen. Adults with the highest levels of pathogen were also two times more likely to fail three-digit reverse subtraction tests. It is thought that gum disease influences brain function through several mechanisms, including body-wide inflammation, a risk factor for loss of mental function.

If you have concerns or questions about the well being of your teeth and gums, call us at 617-479-6220. Please don't let unwarranted fears keep you from maintaining your dental health. Your chances of needing expensive treatment in the future because of neglect today are a far greater concern. The key to dental health is routine preventive care. Most insurance companies allow two cleanings per year. Have you had yours this year. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where we are currently accepting new patients. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. As scientists slowly collect evidence that links oral health with brain function and overall health, patients have more reason than ever to brush and floss and visit the dentist regularly.

DO LUMBAR SUPPORTS PREVENT BACK PAIN?

Those large belts that many people wear around their waists while lifting or carrying heavy objects may be more of a fashion statement than functional equipment. According to a recent review of 15 studies involving more than 15,000 people by Dutch researchers, lumbar supports are not particularly effective at preventing back pain. In fact, the study review found that wearing lumbar supports was no more effective than lifting education (use your legs, not your back) or no treatment at all in preventing related pain or reducing disability. On the other hand, lumbar supports may prove useful as an adjunct to other therapy in that they may provide wearers with a higher level of confidence in their ability to remain active.

New Ways to Treat Varicose Veins

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have varicose veins on both of my legs. I wear only long dresses and slacks to hide them. My legs don't hurt, but I would like to be rid of these veins. What can I do for them? At this point, I am not interested in surgery. -L.H.

ANSWER: Leg veins face a Herculean task. They have to return blood to the heart in the face of gravity, which works to keep blood from moving upward. They couldn't accomplish their task if they didn't have valves. As blood moves upward in the vein, its valves close so that it can't fall back down. The problem with varicose veins is a valve problem. Their valves no longer work. Blood stays in the leg veins, distends them and stretches them out of shape -- varicose veins.

Varicose veins can make the legs ache or cause them to tire quickly. Sometimes, the pooled blood leaks fluid out of the veins, so the ankles and feet swell, and open ulcers -- most often around the ankle -- might form. And then there is the cosmetic aspect, about which I'm not qualified to comment.

Things you can do for varicose veins are limited but worth trying. One is compression stockings. The very best stockings are the ones with graduated compression, with the compressive force greatest in the lowermost part of the leg and with lesser force in the upper parts of the leg. Compression moves blood upward. Another way to keep blood from pooling is lying down with your legs higher

Managing DirectorA THOUGHT
FOR THE WEEK

This is the month one thinks of Abraham Lincoln. That Lincoln was wise, strong, patient, compassionate, able, we know.

Over 7,000 books and pamphlets have been written about him. And there will be more. He was a man of mercy, weakness and strength. He never found a church that he could join, yet no man who has ever been in the White House has more nearly lived the two great commandments... Lincoln had unusual spiritual insight. He could see straight into the hearts of men. He had a childlike dependence upon God. Every situation, no matter how secular it might appear, was to him a spiritual situation. He was a man of great ability, but his overpowering genius lay in his penetrating insight into spiritual truth.

As Carl Sandburg, his greatest biographer, once said: "The greatest memorial to him was a united nation and a love and reverence of him in America and in the family of man over the earth."

We are very fortunate, as a nation, to have had such a great President during one of the most difficult and trying times in our nation's history.

1st Year Anniversary for Peggy Leary

*Although you hid your suffering
It made the Lord so sad
He gently took you home with him.
He wanted you so bad!*

Our precious wife and mother has been gone from us a year.

We miss you with every heartbeat and have shed so many tears.

*We've needed you a million times.
We've longed to see your face.*

*As difficult as it is for us—
You're in a better place!*

A piece of us went with you mom.

Our lives are not the same.

Our world was changed forever.

The day God called your name.

Missed and loved so much by Jack, Jackie, Eddie, Meg, Tricia, Family and friends

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) All that flattery and fawning shouldn't affect any decision you have to make. Keep your focus on the facts and ignore all the hyperbole, especially if it gets uncomfortably personal.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your Bovine instincts are on the mark about that "favor" you're being asked to do. Agree to nothing unless you get a full explanation -- which you would check out first, of course.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A somewhat unsettled recent period should give way to a smoother time going through the week. Use this quieter time to catch up on matters you might have had to let slide.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Feeling a little confused is understandable with all those mixed messages. Take time to list the questions you have. Then present them and insist on answers that make sense.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Cupid can be very helpful for Lions seeking a love connection. The chubby cherub also brings warm and fuzzy feelings to paired Leos and Leonas who already share a special love line.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Travel is favored this week, whether you'll be globe-trotting or taking a trip to a nearby getaway. You might be surprised (or maybe not) by who wants to be your traveling companion.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Getting advice on your next business-related move is a good idea, but only if your advisers are trustworthy. Get references that you can check out before you make any decisions.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Getting a boost in your self-esteem is one benefit that comes with a job well done. There are other plusses as well, including being noticed by all the right people. Good luck.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Make time to deal with family matters, especially where they concern your elderly kinfolk. Being there for them from the start can help resolve problems sooner rather than later.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Getting a project started can often be difficult. But the good news is that you won't want for lack of assistance from colleagues who would like to work with you. So, let them!

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A lot of work-related issues might be raised this week, and you need to be prepared for whatever comes along. Things should be easier when it comes to matters in your private life.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) What might appear to be a very much unwanted change in your life right now could turn out to be a very welcome event after all. Give yourself a chance to see where it might take you.

BORN THIS WEEK: You exercise your strong leadership qualities well, which is why people believe in you and feel reassured by you.

A PRELIMINARY ASSESSMENT of the historic bell tower atop United First Parish Church Tuesday by preservation consultants revealed the tower's steel structure appears in good condition, but the wooden column casings and other woodwork done in 1964 "have failed and need to be replaced."

Marriage Theme Of Reading, Discussion Series At Library

The Friends of the Thomas Crane Library are sponsoring "Happily Ever After," a reading and discussion series exploring the ups and downs of marriage, and aging with those we love, through the lens of classic and contemporary fiction. The series will begin on Monday, March 1 at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

The four-part reading and discussion series, led by Professor Kate McCann, a teacher of poetry and American literature at Eastern Nazarene College, and published author, will begin with the exploration of Kate Chopin's classic work, "The Awakening." First published in 1899, the beautiful, brief novel so disturbed critics and the public that it was banished for decades afterward.

Now widely read and admired, "The Awakening" has been hailed as an early vision of women's emancipation. This book tells of a woman's abandonment of her family, her seduction, and her awakening to desires and passions that threatened to consume her.

Additional books will be discussed the first Monday of each month through June; these books include Wallace Stegner's "The Spectator Bird" on April 5, Alice Munro's collection of short stories "Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage" on May 3, and Anne Tyler's "Breathing Lessons" on June 7.

To register call 617-376-1316; pick up a copy of "The Awakening" at the library.

Wooden Column Casings, Other Woodwork Need To Be Replaced 'Church Of Presidents' Historic Bell Tower Condition Assessed Preservation consultants got a "birds-eye view" of the 105-foot bell tower atop historic United First Parish Church, "Church of the Presidents," using a 160-ton crane Tuesday.

The assessment of the bell tower's condition is a starting point for the church which plans to restore the historic structure. The restoration would be the first major work done to the bell tower in 46 years.

Andrea Gilmore, preservation specialist, and David Webb, preservation carpenter, from Building Conservation Associates, Dedham, Massachusetts, and Chris Dabek, construction manager, from Consigli Construction, Milford, Massachusetts, carefully assessed the existing conditions of the wooden column casings, architectural trim, gilded dome, and weathervane.

This work is being done as part of the church's plans to restore the historic bell tower, which is the most prominent architectural landmark in Quincy Center. Rev. Sheldon Bennett, the church's minister, says, "This is an important first step. It feels good to be moving forward."

The results of the inspection will be documented in a written report with photographs, which will be used by the church's architect, Gary Tondorf-Dick, Hingham, Massachusetts, to develop detailed plans and specifications for the restoration work.

The last time major work was done on the bell-tower was in 1964, when the dome was removed and a steel structure was installed. Wooden column casings were installed to surround the steel columns.

As of mid-day, preliminary examination of the bell tower has revealed that the steel structure appears to be in good condition.

However, according to Ms. Gilmore, the wooden column casings and other woodwork done in 1964 "have failed and need to be replaced."

Architect Tondorf-Dick explained that before today's close-up examination and detailed probing of the condition of the columns and dome, the existing conditions had to be assessed visually from a distance.

Tuesday's exploration "gives us a much more accurate and detailed assessment of the condition of the tower," Tondorf-Dick said. He also said that there has also been significant further deterioration of the woodwork within the past two or three years.

Tondorf-Dick expects to complete detailed plans and specifications this spring with construction work to be performed this summer and early fall.

The church won an $80,000 grant from the National Trust for Historic Preservation "Partners in Preservation" program last year after a 5 week on-line voting campaign conducted in April and May. The church is also the recipient of an $80,000 grant from the City of Quincy Community Preservation Act program.

Scofflaws Face $200 A Day Fines State Law Stiffens Blight Ordinance

By LAURA GRIFFIN

There is real pain ahead for scofflaws ignoring the city's blight ordinance and the $200-a-day fines, according to City Council President Kevin Coughlin.

Coughlin cited last week's passage by the state Senate and House of new legislation aimed at helping municipalities collect fines.

Gov. Deval Patrick signed the legislation last Wednesday.

Coughlin said that Chapter 40U, as it's unofficially labeled, will provide major clout in enforcing the city's three-year old blight ordinance by allowing local officials to place liens on property for unpaid municipal fines.

"We are trying to make it easier to protect the health and quality of life for residents," said Sen. Michael Morrissey of the legislation.

At $200 a day, the fines on unkempt properties will add up quickly and take a bite of offenders' finances and provide the city with an interest in the property.

"I plan to introduce it tonight," Coughlin said referring to this week's City Council meeting. "I'm assuming it will pass unanimously."

Coughlin said the legislation must be cleared by City Council in order to be enforced.

Once City Council approves the legislation, it will go into effect in 90 days, according to Coughlin who said there was no emergency preamble to the act allowing earlier enforcement.

"It provides one more tool in the toolbox," said Coughlin, adding the city didn't have "a good mechanism in place" as incentives for offenders.

Similar legislation being considered at the State House was titled Chapter 40T in the last legislative session.

This bill, formerly House Bill 4883 of 2007-2008 and House Bill 3588 of 2008-2009, originated with the City of Boston's efforts to penalize property owners for not shoveling snow.

The legislators' approval adds Chapter 40U to Chapter 26 of the Acts of 2010.

Coughlin said the law

H1N1, Seasonal Flu Vaccines Offered At Health Department

The Quincy Health Department has scheduled clinics for H1N1 and seasonal flu vaccine Mondays from 2 to 4 p.m. (excluding holidays) at the Kennedy Health Center, 440 East Quantum

St., North Quincy.

Evening clinics are also scheduled Thursdays including tonight, Feb. 25 and March 4 from 5 to 8 p.m. at the Kennedy Center.

There is no charge for either vaccine.

The public clinics, for H1N1 flu vaccine, are open to people 10 years of age and older. Children between the ages of 10 and 18 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

The seasonal vaccine is offered to people age 18 and older.

Participants are asked to fill in a brief vaccination administration record form.

The health department also advises those receiving vaccine to wear clothing that allows quick and ready access to the upper arm for the administration of the flu shot.

Any participant with

Medicare, or seniors should bring insurance cards, for the seasonal vaccine. The health department is allowed to bill for administration of the seasonal vaccine.

QHS Hockey Coach Bob Sylvia Calling It A Career

'It's Been A Great Run' 44 Years Behind Bench

By JOE REARDON

When Bob Sylvia talks hockey, he invariably comes back to what he regards as the intangible that can never be overlooked on the ice, at any level.

Passion.

The iconic coach of the Quincy High team for the past 44 years has a vivid memory of consoling one of his players after the Presidents were eliminated from the tournament several years ago.

"He told me, 'Coach, I'm not crying because we lost the game. I'm crying because we don't have practice tomorrow,'" Sylvia said. "Once you see that passion in a kid, you see things come together."

"I would be very disappointed to have a kid come to me and say, 'Syl, you didn't love the game' because that would hurt."

A huge chapter of Quincy High Hockey is coming to an end at the end of the season with Sylvia stepping down after taking over the program in 1965 from fellow Mass Hockey Hall of

A LEGEND stepping down - Quincy High School hockey coach Bob Sylvia is retiring after 44 seasons behind the Presidents' bench. Photo courtesy of Quincy High School Hockey Boosters

Famer Bill Hutchinson.

The years have flown by in a whirlwind for the personable 66-year-old coach, who also coached boys' soccer, girls' tennis, 14 years at the helm of the varsity baseball team and 30 years as golf coach.

"It seems like the blink of an eye," said Sylvia, whose 44 years as head coach puts him into the top 10 all-time in Massachusetts and possibly the top five. "They used to call me the kid around here. Now you're the old man. It's been a great run all the way."

"It's always hard to admit when it's your time. Especially when you have a passion for something."

Over the years he has coached generations of players in the same family and has seen the game change before his eyes. You don't last 44 years as a head coach without changing with the times, but Sylvia, who has seen five superintendents and six principals through his tenure, credits the people he has been surrounded by as a big reason for his longevity in the high school ranks.

"You last so many years because of the people you see every year," explained Sylvia. "You're not going

Raymondi: Promote Bypassed Sergeant To Lieutenant

By LAURA GRIFFIN

There's no stopping a birthday.

The months are creeping up and Police Sgt. Edward Kusser, 63, faces mandatory retirement from Quincy Police Department in less than two years.

Kusser will retire as a sergeant with the pension appropriate for that title and that's outrageous, according to Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi who believes Kusser should retire as a police lieutenant.

Raymondi cites the Civil Service Commission decision released in January, which found Kusser, was unjustly denied a promotion to lieutenant in 2005.

That should be rectified now, according to Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi who said it's in the best interest of the city and Kusser if he's promoted before retirement.

It would be "a real tragedy if he retires without getting (the appointment)..." said Raymondi who described Kusser's situation as unjust and potentially costly to the city.

On Feb. 1, Raymondi distributed a proposed resolution asking City Council to request that Mayor Thomas Koch not appeal the Civil Service decision. He will formally present his resolve at this week's meeting.

Raymondi's proposal, also, asks Koch to "take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that, prior to Sgt. Kusser's mandatory retirement at age 65, that he be appointed lieutenant with the Quincy Police Department."

"This case was so powerful," Raymondi said of the Commission's finding that Kusser was wronged.

Raymondi believes the city cannot win an appeal and any court challenge would be costly.

"That's all part of my rationale, that we not go down the path of litigation," said Raymondi who outlined the hundreds of thousands of dollars that a court case might cost the city.

"Even though, these are difficult financial times, it's only going to cost more to litigate," said Raymondi.

Kusser is first in line for the promotion to lieutenant now but there are no imminent openings for that spot in the department.

Raymondi quotes the findings of the commission is his lengthy resolve, noting that Kusser was bypassed in favor of four sergeants with lower scores and less experience.

"The evidence introduced at the Civil Service Commission hearing failed to demonstrate that there was reasonable justification for the bypass action of the City of Quincy."

The Civil Service decision which found in favor of Kusser criticized the selection format as well as the decisions of former Mayor William Phelan.

Phelan, contacted on Tuesday, declined to comment.

Raymondi also cites the Commission's finding of a major failing in bypassing Kusser, "The unacceptable bias that contaminated the process involved the fact that three of the candidates for lieutenant were relatives of the sitting mayor."

Last week, Sgt. Kusser said he has not discussed the issue with Raymondi and has only heard about the councillor's efforts on his behalf.

Kusser declined to comment on the resolution, saying, "I don't think I should."

Quincy Schools Robotics Team HYPER Competition Saturday

Quincy Public Schools HYPER Robotics will host its annual mini-meet competition Saturday, Feb. 18 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Bethany Congregational Church, 18 Spear St., Quincy Center.

The event will host approximately 10 teams practicing and competition on a regulation size playing field

"If the fine remains unpaid after said 30 days, additional penalties and interest may be attached.

"Thereafter any fine and additional penalties and interest that may be attached and which remain unpaid shall become an additional assessment on the property owner's tax bill.

"Such amount and cost relative thereto may also be a lien upon such real estate as provided in section 42B of Chapter 40."

Tax Break For Deployed Military

State Sen. Michael Morrissey announced Tuesday that Gov. Deval Patrick signed Quincy's Home Rule Petition allowing real estate tax abatements for deployed military.

The petition initiated by City Council President Kevin Coughlin provides abatements for those military deployed in Afghanistan and Iraq.

"They are the citizen soldiers who step away from civilian life for military pay that does not equal what they were paid in civilian life," Coughlin said when presenting the proposal to City Council in November 2008.

"They have enough stress as it is. This will give some relief to them and their families."

The Board of Assessors will establish eligibility for the abatement, acting on information obtained by Veterans Services, including deployment orders and military pay vouchers.

Coughlin said that Patrick plans to participate in a ceremonial signing in Quincy in the next few weeks.

RUSH TO SELL OLD GOLD

Active investors know that the price of gold has recently risen to well over $1,000 per ounce. If you have not taken advantage of the rising price of this precious commodity by purchasing gold bars and coins and piling them into a safe, there is still plenty of opportunity. The fact is that jewelers will pay prevailing market prices for gold jewelry that you no longer use or want. This means that gold jewelry that you purchased in the past at relatively low prices has been gaining value in your jewelry box. So you might want to take a look at your old gold jewelry, sort out the pieces that you can live without, and cash them in.

Rogers Diamonds • Watches • Jewelry

From ancient times when it adorned religious objects to present day investment opportunities, gold continues to serve man in many ways. If you are considering selling your previously worn-but-now-out-of-fashion gold jewelry, now is the best time to seek professional help. The wise shopper looks for the advice and guidance of someone who can offer knowledge, experience, and integrity. He or she wants to feel confident of realizing a fair price from a reputable merchant. Part Of Plan To Save $4.5 Million State Reimbursement Shortfall Spells Job Loss, Proposed Pay Cut At QMC

By TOM HENSHAW

The failure of the state to provide adequate reimbursement for Medicaid patients is forcing Quincy Medical Center to eliminate 14 jobs, mostly in management, and ask its 1,200 workers to take a pay cut of 3%, as well as pay more for their own health insurance, all by March 1.

The aim is to save $4.5 million by the end of the year.

"We used to get a significant contribution," said Dr. Gary Gibbons, the CEO of QMC. "We were reimbursed a percentage of the cost. For six or seven years there has been a shortfall. Reimbursement has lagged. There is no way out. We have to stay alive."

QMC is one of six hospitals that is suing the state, claiming they are owed $70 million in Medicaid reimbursements over three years. QMC, said Dr. Gibbons, has a $21.5 million shortfall in reimbursements.

The hospital is also feeling the pinch from the independent clinics and health centers that have sprung up in neighborhoods around the city and adjoining towns where QMC draw most of its patients. Inpatient volume is down 5 percent, said Dr. Gibbons.

"The centers are taking business away from the hospitals," he said.

To counter the loss of patients, the hospital plans to expand its Adams Geriatrics section into a Center for Healthy Aging this summer in partnership with the local senior citizens centers, nursing homes and other health care agencies in the community.

"We want to add to our repertoire," said Dr. Gibbons. "The baby boomers are reaching the age now. We need to develop something for them. We need a unified system of care that will bring together the community agencies to avoid duplication of services."

"We have bond money to redesign the emergency room and the Center for Healthy Aging will be off the emergency room. Medicine has been very traditional. We need to bring other things together."

The new center will include specialized lighting for patients with vision problems, partitions to increase privacy and bedside registration to reduce waiting time. QMC is already training nurses for the coming geriatrics section with a program called "Nurses Improving Care for Health-system Elders."

Most of the 14 jobs cut will be on the management level, said Dr. Gibbons. "We want to preserve as many health care workers as possible," he said.

Before the 3 percent wage cuts and the hike in some employee contributions for health insurance from 20 percent to 25 percent can be achieved it has to pass muster of four unions. The hospital expects the cuts in wages, expenses and supplies would save $1.7 million.

"For Quincy Medical Center to survive, we have to transform ourselves," said Dr. Gibbons. "There is no money to bail us out."

If the unions don't agree to go along with the plan, he said, "we'll figure out another way. Failure is not an option."

Community Meeting Tonight On Wireless Antenna Application

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin has scheduled a community meeting tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Montclair School gymnasium on Clearwire's proposal to place wireless communication antennas on the roof of 95 West Squantum St.

Residents will have an opportunity to raise questions and concerns. The gym is accessed from the Holbrook Road parking lot.

In addition to representatives from Clearwire, Coughlin has requested the attendance of an independent professional in the field and City Solicitor James Timmins to help address issues raised during the course of the meeting.

Responding to constituents' concerns, Coughlin said he authored the city's Wireless Communications Ordinance which was enacted in 2002. The ordinance outlines local governance of these matters subject to the provisions of the federal Telecommunications Act of 1996.

The Zoning Board of Appeals will further consider this application for a special permit March 9. Interested residents are encouraged to attend.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Feb. 24, 1786, Wilhelm Karl Grimm, the younger of the two Brothers Grimm, is born in Germany. Grimm's Fairy Tales were produced in several volumes between 1812 and 1822. Tales in the Grimm collection include "Hansel and Gretel," "Snow White" and "Little Red Riding Hood."

• On Feb. 27, 1827, a group of students dance through the streets of New Orleans, marking the beginning of the city's famous Mardi Gras celebrations. Inspired by their experiences studying in Paris, the students donned masks and jester costumes and staged their own Fat Tuesday festivities.

• On Feb. 25, 1870, Hiram Rhodes Revels, a Republican from Natchez, Miss., is sworn into the U.S. Senate, becoming the first African-American ever to sit in Congress. During the Civil War, Revels, a college-educated minister, helped form black army regiments for the Union cause.

• On Feb. 28, 1932, the last Ford Model A is produced. The Model A boasted a peppy 40-horsepower, four-cylinder engine with a self-starting mechanism.

The Model A had a base price of $460. Five million Model A's rolled onto American highways between 1927 and 1932.

• On Feb. 23, 1954, a group of children from Arsenal Elementary School in Pittsburgh, receive the first injections of the new polio vaccine developed by Dr. Jonas Salk. A later version of the polio vaccine, developed by Albert Sabin, was swallowed instead of injected.

• On Feb. 26, 1972, a dam collapses in West Virginia, flooding a valley and killing 118 people. Tailings, the byproduct of coal mining, was the cause, as the material is unstable when dumped on hills. The Buffalo Mining Company, which was responsible for the tailings, was forced to pay $30 million in damages.

• On Feb. 22, 1980, the underdog U.S. hockey team, made up of college players, defeats the four-time defending gold-medal winning Soviet team at the XIII Olympic Winter Games in Lake Placid, N.Y. Two days later, the Americans defeated Finland 4-2 to clinch the hockey gold.

History Of The First USS Quincy Topic Feb. 25

An in-depth look at the story of the first USS Quincy heavy cruiser will be the next program at the Quincy Historical Society, Thursday, Feb. 25 at 7:30 p.m. at the Adams Academy, 8 Adams St., Quincy Center.

The public is welcome. Admission is free.

Built at Fore River and commissioned in 1936, the Quincy served through the first months of World War II and was sunk in the Battle of Savo Island, during the invasion of Guadalcanal. The wreck of the Quincy was found in 1992. The ship has always been a source of pride for the people of Quincy.

Guest speaker Bob Begin has done extensive original research on all phases of the Quincy's story, from its construction, through the celebrations here in Quincy for the launching, to the lives of some of the men who served on the ship.

His illustrated presentation will combine a wealth of detail about the ship, its wartime service, and the discovery of the wreck, with a strong interest in the experiences of individuals at each stage of the ship's career.

Delahunt Out? Kennedy In?

Will he or won't he?

The "he" is Congressman William Delahunt. And the question political observers are wondering: will he seek re-election this fall?

If he doesn't, there's speculation a Democrat with a familiar political name will vie for his seat: Joseph P. Kennedy, III.

Delahunt is expected to make a decision about his political future in March, Chief of Staff Mark Forest told the Sun. But Forest would not speculate as to what that announcement might be.

"Bill Delahunt has not made an official announcement yet. He'll do that in a few weeks," said Forest, who has served on Delahunt's staff since 1997 and the last five as chief of staff.

Forest said Delahunt is in the process of collecting the necessary 2,000 signatures required to be on the ballot next fall. That may indicate he will seek an eighth two-year term.

Delahunt — the only Quincy elected official to serve at four levels of government (city, state, county and national government) — was first elected to Congress in 1996. That was the year of the famous recount and court challenge following the Democratic primary.

In the September primary that year, former state representative Phil Johnston of Marshfield scored a narrow victory over Delahunt. Ian Bowles finished third. A recount also favored Johnston by 181 votes.

However, Delahunt challenged the voting results in two Cape Cod towns and Weymouth. Those ballots were discovered to have "hanging chads" because they were damp with humidity. Judge Elizabeth Donovan reviewed all the ballots and declared Delahunt the winner because of voter intent with those "hanging chads."

Delahunt then defeated Republican Ed Teague from Cape Cod in the general election in 1996 to succeed Gerry Studds who did not seek re-election.

When he was seated in 1997, Delahunt became the first Quincy resident to serve in Congress since former President John Quincy Adams represented the district over 160 years ago.

He began his political career when he was elected Ward 5 councillor in 1971. He also served as a state representative and Norfolk County district attorney before becoming a Congressman.

As a U.S. representative, Delahunt has had an opponent every election cycle except one: 2008.

And if he decides to seek another term, he will have another contested race.

Fueled by Republican Scott Brown's stunning victory in the special U.S. Senate race last month, a myriad of candidates have already declared their candidacies for Delahunt's seat or have indicated they will shortly.

Those already in the race:

• Republicans Jeff Perry, a state representative from Sandwich; Don Hussey of Hingham and Ray Kasperiowicz of Cohasset.

• Independent Peter White, a Mashpee motel owner.

Joe Malone, another Republican and former state treasurer from Scituate, says he is planning to enter the race.

Also weighing a run: Republican State Sen. Bob Hedlund of Weymouth.

"Bill has never shied away from a political challenge," Forest said, alluding to the growing number of candidates in the 10th Congressional race.

Delahunt serves as a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Europe. He is also a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs Subcommittee International Organizations, Human Rights, and Oversight.

Delahunt has also worked to improve diplomatic relations throughout Latin America.

Could the congressman be in line for an ambassadorship?

Well, if he is, it wouldn't be the first time a Congressman representing Quincy retired to become ambassador.

Back in 1992, former Cong. Brian Donnelly announced he would not seek re-election. He went on to serve three years in the Clinton Administration as ambassador of Trinidad and Tobago.

If Delahunt does not seek re-election, some political observers believe Joseph P. Kennedy III will seek the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 10th District that includes Quincy, much of the South Shore, Cape Cod and the Islands.

Kennedy is the son of former Cong. Joseph P. Kennedy II and the grandson of the late Senator and Presidential candidate Robert Kennedy. He's also the great-nephew of the late Sen. Ted Kennedy.

Kennedy is no stranger to Quincy, either: he's visited the city on several occasions in the last six months. He represented his family at the dedication of the Kennedy Center in North Quincy last summer and he also attended Manet Community Health Center's 30th anniversary dinner last fall.

If Kennedy is interested in public service, why didn't he seek the Senate seat held by his great uncle for nearly 47 years last month?

One reason: he wasn't old enough. The minimum age for a U.S. Senator is 30 years. Kennedy will turn 30 on Oct. 4.

But he is old enough to be elected a Congressman (age minimum is 25 years old.)

A former resident of Cambridge, Kennedy now lives in Hyannis and works as an assistant district attorney in Barnstable County.

If Kennedy were to win the race for Congress, there are some who think he may then challenge Brown for U.S. Senate in 2012. It's possible the state will lose a congressional seat due to redistricting and Kennedy would run for Senate and not seek re-election in a redrawn district, the thinking goes.

So we'll just have to wait and see if March comes in with Delahunt in the race or goes out with a Kennedy instead.

Quincy Lions Club Run/Walk For Sight April 17

Online registration is open for the Quincy Lions Club's 13th annual Run/Walk for Sight Saturday, April 17 at Pageant Field in Quincy.

To register online, visit www.quincylionsclub.org

Day-of-race registration will begin at 9 a.m. followed by the start of the children's 1K race at 10:30 a.m. The adult 5K run/walk — which is on a course certified by U.S. Track and Field — will begin at 11 a.m.

Prizes will be awarded to race winners in a number of categories. The first 200 registrants will receive a free race t-shirt and runner's giveaway bag.

Registration fee is $20 for adults and $5 for the children's 1K race, and includes a buffet lunch following the race. There will also be entertainment and a prize raffle featuring Red Sox tickets, restaurant gift certificates and more.

"The Run/Walk for Sight is a fun event for the whole family," said Lions Club President Michelle Lydon. "The local community has been very supportive of the Lions Club's efforts to help blind and visually impaired individuals, and we hope everyone will come out and enjoy this fun and worthwhile event."

Proceeds from the run/walk benefit eye research and Lions Club activities, including providing free eye exams and free eyeglasses for local residents in need, offering free vision and health screenings, and providing college scholarships.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS 1920 real photo postcard view of the interior of the old Squantum Inn that was built in 1898 by Nelson Titus near today's Shoreham Street. In the summer people came here for the day by steamboat from Boston's City Point or by train to the Atlantic depot, where trolleys took them to Squantum. The Inn's rooms and dining parlors had panoramic views of Dorchester Bay. The menu featured locally harvested shellfish, lobsters and fish dinners. The area shown here next to the fireplace could have been for gentlemen to enjoy a fine cigar and a glass of brandy after dinner. The bust over the mantle was probably to depict Squanto for whom some believe the peninsular was named. After the inn closed in 1928, it became home to Boston's first two radio stations. It was demolished in 1943 when the property was sold and divided into house lots. Questions Community Unity After Shooting

My husband and I have lived in Quincy our entire lives and we are now proudly raising our family here. I recall a while back controversy over the "C-Mart" Asian grocery store that was to be built near Hannaford's. There were meetings upon meetings about the impact it would have in the North Quincy area. Safety was, of course, a priority because of the school children in the area, crosswalks, large trucks backing in and out and the hassle of the residential streets.

So, if anyone attended these meetings, you would know the Asian attendance was in the hundreds. We all listened to how inconvenient it was to shop in Chinatown, how other local grocery stores were not good enough because they did not carry particular items and so on.

Now fast forward to the shooting near North Quincy High School. On Feb. 8, there was a meeting for parents and the community to discuss the incident and shed some light on people's fears and what we can do as a community to ensure that this does not happen again.

Asian attendance at this meeting was less than two percent; the shooting happened right in their backyards and they didn't bother to attend. Why? When living in a community one must be proactive, attending PTO meetings, coaching, eating at restaurants, volunteering and supporting all local businesses. I could go on and on, but I think you all get the point.

Now I read "Quincy Lunar New Year Welcomes

Year of the Tiger."

"The 2010 festival will mark not only the Year of the Tiger, but also the community's 22nd year of celebrating our diversity, tradition, and unity in Quincy," said Peter Tam, co-chair of the festival.

Really? Where was the unity on Feb. 8? I guess unity is only if you directly benefit from something, however feel free to use North Quincy High School on Feb. 28 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. for your festival.

A Response From The Director Of Asian Resources

(Editor's Note: The Quincy Sun asked Quincy Asian Resources to respond to some of the points made in the letter printed above. That response appears here.)

I was proud to see the strong turnout at the community meeting held last Monday night at North Quincy High School. It was a credit to the strong sense of community here in Quincy.

I understand that some have questioned the participation of Quincy's Asian residents. Due to the urgent nature of the meeting, not much notice was given and many residents did not know of the meeting or like me learned of it that day.

I attended as did several members of the Asian community I know. Others like our Festival Chairperson, Peter Tam, a North Quincy High graduate, watched the meeting on QATV.

Unfortunately, many Asian and non Asian residents do not read English language newspapers and to my knowledge the meeting was not mentioned ahead of time in Chinese language newspapers. We at Quincy Asian Resources know that word of mouth, communicating through Chinese language newspapers and providing interpreters are keys to encouraging participation.

Education and our youth are important priorities for everyone, including Asian-

Americans living in Quincy. This does not mean people with limited English proficiency are comfortable attending large meetings conducted in English.

I hope some good can come out of this shooting next to one of our schools and we can continue to work to build a stronger community that includes everyone!

Scene From Yesterday Reveals A Vision for Tomorrow

The Quincy Sun's Feb. 4th "Scenes From Yesterday" provided a beautiful image city leaders could use as a blueprint to our economic security. The July 1920 postcard reveals a peaceful but thriving waterfront.

Now that the water is clean again our 27 miles of coast are a valuable resource and it's time we treat it that way. I was disappointed the inaugural address did not mention the beaches as part of the city's economic revitalization. It was all about the road going through the center of downtown.

It's time to put the brakes on the proposed arrangement with Thayer Academy. Let's invite ideas about how the city can generate revenue for the city by improving access, renting sailboats, kayaks and canoes. Quincy is a special city and the key to a secure financial future lies in our past.

This city should once again be a "destination location."

Quincy's Yesterdays

Ross Denies Charges Brought By Bates

By FRANK McCAULEY

A general denial of every charge brought against him by County Commissioner Russell T. Bates and others, who are attempting to unseat him for alleged violations of the Corrupt Practice Act, were included in the answer filed by Mayor Charles A. Ross in Suffolk Superior Court.

Then, to make his case doubly secure, the mayor in his answer, said that even if certain violations are proven, they were unintentional, unimportant and of limited character. By doing so, he is availing himself of the defense permitted in the law, which permits violations if they are of a "trivial, unimportant and limited character."

Attorney Avery W. Gilkerson, attorney for County Commissioner Bates, would not say whether or not he would fight against the mayor's request, saying they would be able to speak in great detail on the offenses they hope to prove.

(Editor's note: Excerpts from the Ross Trail and the Court's verdict will appear in a Quincy's Yesterdays column in March.)

TAX JUMP SEEN BY NEW BUDGET - $5,071,678 ASKED IN ANNUAL ORDER

The annual budget order, totaling $5,071,678, about $375,000 larger than total expenditures for 1934-was presented to the city council by Mayor Charles A. Ross.

The size of the budget would mean about a $3 increase in the tax rate if the state and county taxes and receipts from various sources were the same as last year.

The budget was referred to the finance committee of the council, which will hold a series of budget sessions on the budget requests.

BRUSH PAINTING by Jinghua Gao Dalia will be among the featured artwork at Quincy Medical Center's Green Brush Art Reception April 27 from 6 to 9 p.m. in the QMC McCauley Building Lobby, 114 Whitwell St., Quincy.

Animal Program For Children Today At Library

"Creature Teachers: Animals Around the World" will be the topic for a children's program today (Thursday) at 10:30 a.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library.

The program, for children ages 4 and older and their families, will be held the main library's large meeting room.

No registration is required. Space is limited to the first 125 people.

Those attending will learn about unusual animals and where they come from. The program explores the diverse habitats of Earth, the animals that live within them, and why some animals are well suited for certain areas and why some are not.

The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

QMC To Hold Second Annual Green Brush Art Reception

Quincy Medical Center (QMC) will hold its second annual Green Brush Art Reception Tuesday, April 27 from 6 to 9 p.m. in the QMC McCauley Building Lobby, 114 Whitwell St., Quincy.

The Green Brush Art Reception will feature Asian culture, art, music, fashion and cuisine to benefit the QMC Asian Service Fund, which provides free health education, screenings and publications to the South Shore's growing Asian community and enhances Asian services at QMC.

There will be a silent auction of artwork by internationally-renowned Chinese American Fine Art Society artists, live traditional Chinese music by the musicians of the Foundation for Chinese Performing Arts, and an Asian couture fashion show with models from Boston's Tonn Model Management.

Participants will also enjoy live Chinese brush painting and calligraphy demonstrations, raffle drawings, and wine, beverages and hors d'oeuvres.

"This year's reception is shaping up to be a very entertaining and exciting event thanks to our event chairpeople Catherine Tan Chan, PhD, Foundation for Chinese Performing Arts; Wan Wu, PhD, Kam Man Food; and Tonn Cao, Tonn Model Management; and our entire planning committee comprised of many local businesses and community leaders.

"It will be a rich evening of Asian culture," said Lola Tom, QMC Asian Services Manager. "We are also very thankful for the numerous sponsorships that have already come in, including top Green Brush Stroke level sponsors, Signsandprints.com, Kam Man Food and South Cove Community Health Center."

All members of the public and business community are welcome. Event tickets are $68 each and sponsorship opportunities are available. For more information, call (617) 376-5493.

Free Classical Guitar Concert Sunday

Guitarist Kevin Hubbard will present an entertaining and informative concert program "Classical Guitar with a Taste of Jazz" Sunday, Feb. 21 at 3 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Hubbard will perform classical pieces from all eras, jazz standards, folk songs from around the globe, and classical and jazz originals.

A native of Duxbury, Hubbard began playing the guitar at age 18, learning rock, jazz and classical styles.

In the late 1990s, Hubbard began to focus on the Spanish-style classical guitar, studying with Boston-area guitarist John Muratore, and attending a master class in Granada, Spain.

He has released three

CDs featuring both his own original music and that of other composers, in a variety of musical styles, which have received praise from reviewers around the United States.

The performance, for all ages, is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

For more information, call 617-376-1316.

Book Club To Discuss 'The Stones' Feb. 22

Eleanor Gustafson's novel The Stones will be the focus of the next meeting of the Faith and Spirituality Book Club Monday, Feb. 22 at 7:30 p.m. at the main branch of the Thomas Crane Public Library in Quincy Center.

All are welcome to attend the free book club discussion.

Sponsored by the Houghs Neck Congregational Church, the club meets regularly to discuss books that explore issues of faith and spirituality. This month's selection combines historical fiction with spiritual accuracy to tell the epic story of the life of King David.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Protecting Oil Burner Fuel Lines: Here's Another New One

For some time now, oil burner fuel lines have required protection in the event a leak occurs. These lines run from the oil tank to the oil burner. Since I've worked within this office, every time a modification is made to an oil burner or oil tank beyond the yearly maintenance requirements, the fuel line has to be updated and protected to conform with the newer regulations if it hasn't been already.

There are two methods of doing so. One is a sleeve within which the copper fuel line is placed. Should a leak occur, it is more apparent while to some extent confined within the sleeve without seeping into the ground undetected. The other method requires a valve referred to as an OSV. It stands for an oil safety valve, which is designed to shutdown the flow should a leak occur within the line. It is the easier fix between the two while some installers discourage their use.

By July 1, 2010, the DEP will require protection from one or the other. Instead of having the issue addressed when a change occurs, by July, you will had to have the issue addressed proactively.

It has to do with a new state initiative that requires homeowners to take steps to prevent costly spills within a home. In the event of a leak, where oil seeps into the basement or floor below, costly cleanups will be prevented when the lines are protected.

Meanwhile, the law includes a provision that insurance companies that presently write homeowner policies within Massachusetts provide coverage for leaks from heating systems that use oil. Most homeowner policies do not currently include such coverage leaving many to pay for costly cleanups out of their own pocket. Although it is mandatory that insurance companies offer this coverage by July 1, 2010, the insurance is an optional purchase for homeowners.

Both these provisions affect owners of 1 to 4 family residences that are heated with oil. Again, they must already have or install either an oil safety valve or an oil supply line protective sleeve. A licensed oil burner technician must perform the installation of these devices. Technicians are typically employed by companies that deliver home heating oil or are independently self-employed. Either way, they must hold a oil burner technician's certificate issued by the state in order to work on these systems.

You will find more information at <http://www.mass.gov/dep/cleanup/laws/hsl.htm>.

The reference is titled: HOMEOWNER OIL HEATING UPGRADE AND INSURANCE LAW. Meanwhile you are welcome to contact us in the fire prevention bureau for further information as well. Thank you.

Morrissey Votes To Freeze Unemployment Insurance Rate

State Sen. Michael W. Morrissey of Quincy recently voted to freeze the Unemployment Insurance rate, which was scheduled to increase by nearly $300 per employee.

Without the freeze, the average employer would see the per-employee payment jump from $584 to $852.

"This vote was one of several actions the Senate is set to undertake over the next several months to improve the current business climate, support our small businesses, and create new jobs," Morrissey said.

Those other efforts include Senate-sponsored legislation to streamline the state's array of business development agencies, many of which overlap duties and lack coordinated efforts. The Senate also supports certain business tax incentives and a cap on small business health insurance rates to provide further relief and encourage short-term growth.

In addition to these continually developing measures, the Legislature has also reduced the corporate excise tax, dropping this year to 8.75 percent and to 8 percent by January 2012.

The Senate bill to freeze the Unemployment Insurance rate would hold steady the current rate schedule for Unemployment Insurance assessments on employers for calendar year 2010.

"In the previous recesssions of 2003 and 2008, the state has frozen the assessment schedule to relieve the burden on small businesses in tough economic times," Morrissey said.

In recognition of the almost unprecedented strain on state unemployment insurance systems, the federal government will charge no interest on borrowing in calendar year 2010.

The bill goes back to the House of Representatives for further action and approval.

QHS Hockey Coach Bob Sylvia Calling It A Career

to see any more dinosaurs like me. The wives won't allow it."

Quincy High Athletic Director Jim Rendle said Sylvia turned out a countless number of quality teams. His time behind the Quincy bench is at least double of any coach at either high school.

"He's been very consistent," said Rendle. "He turns out a good product every year. The kids play hard for him."

Sitting in his office in the catacombs of Quincy High last week, Sylvia reflected on the past and present. The Presidents were still fighting for a postseason berth with key Patriot League games coming up against Hanover and Pembroke.

The Hanover game was Wednesday at 7:10 p.m. at the Quincy Youth Arena.

The Pembroke game is today (Thursday) at 10 a.m. at Hobamock Arena. Pembroke.

The Hanover match-up is always extra special for Sylvia. His younger brother, Jim, is a legend in Mass hockey circles and will join Bob in the state hockey hall of fame in May. Bob cherishes the brother-against-brother tilt.

"The last game scheduled is against my brother," he said. "We've done a lot of things together in the game. Through the years we've had the same temper. I hope our father's watching down on us and smiling."

He's thrilled, too, about Jim's impending induction. "I came in the side door," Bob said. "They'll roll out the red carpet for Jimmy."

Jim doesn't see it that way.

"When I'm coaching against him I'm coaching against the best," he said. "I think he's the best hockey coach I've ever seen. He always gets the absolute best out of his kids."

"Above all, he's been a great mentor to me. He's left his mark on Massachusetts high school hockey. They're losing a good one."

In 44 years there were great moments and truly bad times. The worst came in 1995 when sophomore Matt Messing was checked during a game and went into cardiac arrest. He passed away soon after.

"I don't care what anyone says," said Bob solemnly. "That boy died in my arms right there on the ice."

Coaching for so many years, Bob has attended funerals of former players, more than he'd care to remember. "You have the highs and you have the low moments," he said.

The good memories, though, far outweighed the bad. Bob will never forget the excitement that permeated through the team in 1978 when it played in the state tournament at Boston Garden.

"I was watching them," he said. "The idea they were walking down the same corridor and hallways that Bobby Orr and Phil Esposito did was a thrill. I went last just to watch and savor it."

Bob was a stellar player himself as a schoolboy and collegiate. He played at Boston Latin and was the co-captain of Boston University. The Terriers played Boston College in the Beanpot final that year, falling to the Eagles 5-4.

He stayed at B.U. to work on his masters and saw that Quincy was looking for a hockey coach. Because several of the candidates were looking for the position to lead into a teaching job, they weren't hired. Bob was offered the job and never looked back.

Bob doesn't see as much passion from players in general as he did years ago. There are more avenues for players to improve their skills now, but the pond hockey days, he maintains, are a thing of the past.

He remembers in high school when the coach told the players they were scrimmaging Belmont Hill. "I didn't even know where Belmont Hill was," he said with a laugh. "But you carried your duffle bag and got there because you wanted to play."

He's looking forward to spending time with his grandchildren and his wife, Karen. He has five daughters and "hundred of adopted sons" he likes to call all his players over the years.

Bob called his wife his biggest supporter. "I owe a lot of time to the woman I married," he said.

He won't be away from hockey completely either with some of his grandchildren playing. "Maybe I might be an assistant coach to a Mite B team," he said.

Bob believes the fact that he will be retired won't sink in until next fall, Nov. 29 to be exact, the first day of practice.

"That will be the toughest day for me. It's the sound of the stick hitting the puck, the sound of snow flying when a player comes to a stop."

"They're the sounds of hockey."

QUINCY BANTAMS SQUARED off against a team from Austria Monday night as the week-long Kiwanis Hockey Tournament kicked off at the Quincy Youth Arena.

Competition Underway At Quincy Youth Arena Austrians Accent Kiwanis International Hockey Tourney

By JOE REARDON

Alexander Lahada emerged from the locker room, his dark hair matted to his forehead with sweat, a vivid reminder of the effort he put in on the Quincy Arena ice.

Austria's chippy 5-3 win over the Quincy Bantams was just 15 minutes old and the 13-year-old member of the Austrian team was glad to have come out of the opening game in the Kiwanis International Tournament with a victory Monday night.

For Lahada, who had one of Austria's five tallies, the game was extra special. "It was my first game in the U.S.," said Lahada, in perfect English.

The speedy right-winger expected a physical matchup with Quincy and that's what the home team dealt out. Austria's players, though, braced for the onslaught and matched Quincy at its own game. "We're happy," said Lahada. "We body checked well."

The defending champion team knew it would be in the cross hairs of the five scheduled games it has on the tourney schedule against local squads this week. If all goes as planned the speedsters will be playing in Sunday's championship showdown.

A huge fan of Austrian-born sniper Tomas Vanek of the Buffalo Sabres, Lahada looks at Russian great Alexander Ovechkin as the player he strives to emulate the most. "He scores a lot of goals even when he gets hit," said Lahada. "He never gives up on a play."

Trailing 2-0 after the opening period, Quincy never let up with some heavy hitting in the corners. Aaron Clancy, Brendan Cox and Andrew Currie all poked home tallies for Quincy to keep the game close.

"It's a big difference," said Austria's assistant coach Klaus Kuhs referring to the U.S. hitting and aggressiveness going after the puck. "The game here is more physical than in Austria. It was a good start."

"They're playing a lot of good teams. They have a little pressure on them but they can handle it."

Archbishop Williams freshman Colin Donnelly wasn't surprised by Austria's intensity fighting for the puck on the boards, and in the offensive and defensive zones. "We expected it a little," said Donnelly. "I thought we played them well. We didn't get frustrated."

ed when we fell behind. We kept battling."

Kuhs, along with Austria's other coaches, drilled into their players' heads the importance of being around the net to pounce on any loose pucks and playing tight defense when Quincy was in the Austrian end.

"You have to take advantage of rebounds," Kuhs said. "You get the rebound and you get a big chance to score."

As for following the Winter Olympics, Kuhs admitted there aren't enough hours in the day, between playing games and sightseeing with the host families. "We don't have much time to watch the Olympics," he said.

Tom Brennan of Weymouth, who played in the Kiwanis Tournament in 1976, is hosting two players at his home for the week. The Houghs Neck native believes the commiserating between the two sports through hockey is a fantastic opportunity for the players on both sides of the globe.

"They're awesome kids," said Brennan, whose son, Michael, is a ninth grader at Xaverian. "They're really polite, really nice kids. The language barrier can be tough."

The Brennans spent Monday shopping in New Hampshire where the Austrian boys bought sneakers and new hockey sticks.

"The sticks are cheaper here," said Brennan. "They're more than $200 in Austria."

Cahill Kicks Off Signature Drive At Campaign Opening

By ROBERT BOSWORTH

Independent gubernatorial candidate Tim Cahill predicted victory in November as several hundred supporters chanted "Tim in '10, Tim in '10" at the opening of his campaign headquarters at 180 Old Colony Ave. in Wollaston Saturday.

"The message of fiscal responsibility, of independence, of taking care of the middle class and focusing on the people is going to resonate," the former Quincy city councillor and two-term state treasurer told enthusiastic supporters crowded into his headquarters.

"We're going to win this race and I'm going to be elected the first Independent governor," said a confident Cahill who launched his independent bid for the state's highest elective office last September after leaving the Democratic party.

Cahill was introduced by his running mate, lieutenant governor candidate Paul Loscocco, a former state representative from Holliston who left the Republican party in January to join Cahill's Independent ticket. Cahill said he plans to open another campaign headquarters in downtown Holliston in March.

The location of his Quincy headquarters stands on the site of the former Howard Johnson's Candy Factory. Cahill spotlighted Howard Johnson's success story in his book published in 1994 entitled "Profiles in the American Dream - The Real-Life Struggles of American Entrepreneurs."

The location also currently houses classrooms for Eastern Nazarene College.

"We've been in here since October and we wanted to wait to formally kick this thing off until after the (special U.S.) senate race," said Cahill, who once operated Handshakes Cafe in Quincy Center.

"We have over 13,000 people already signed up as part of our organization and our volunteer network," the candidate said in an interview before addressing about 200 supporters at the opening turned mini-rally.

Another 800 friends and supporters filed in and out of 3,500-square-foot headquarters during the three-hour open house.

Saturday also served as Cahill's launching point for collecting the required 10,000 signatures he'll need to be on the ballot for the Nov. 2 final election.

"We're getting nomination papers out today because today's the first day that you can do nomination papers."

Besides collecting signatures in Quincy, the campaign also set-up remote collection sites in Pittsfield, Springfield, Taunton and Lynn.

In his remarks to his campaign supporters in Quincy, Cahill also reached out - via the Internet and Skype technology on laptop computers - to thank campaign volunteers who were collecting signatures at those remote sites.

"We're going to be collecting signatures over the next couple of months so we'll try to get as many as we can," said Cahill.

The deadline for statewide candidates to submit nomination papers to local election officials for certification of signatures is May 4.

Cahill - who is focusing on a strong grass-roots oriented campaign - will face Gov. Deval Patrick, a Democrat, and either Republican candidate Charlie Baker or Christy Mihos, in the Nov. 2 final election.

"All we need is 10,000 signatures. We don't need to go through the party caucuses, we don't have to go through the party leadership," Cahill said.

"They can't tell us that we can't get on the ballot. We'll just go right to the people which is really what's been exciting about this campaign. I don't have to play games. I don't have to beg people to support me so I can get my 15 percent (of committed delegates at a party convention).

"I'm going right to the people and it's their call whether they're going to vote for me or not. Everyone seems really energized and excited about this whole thing as am I."

Cahill said the election of Scott Brown "was a great message for us and for the people supporting me and for some people who weren't supporting me because they understand there's a movement going on out there driven by independents. I think they're looking for their own candidate."

"They're not for a Republican who's trying to be an Independent, not for a Democrat who's trying to be an Independent but for an Independent who actually is an Independent."

"If we keep working at it, I feel very good about our chances."

Feedback from his 15-second political ad that appeared during the Super Bowl telecast has been "unbelievable," Cahill said.

The ad, which cost his campaign $20,000, appeared in the Massachusetts and southern New Hampshire TV market. Approximately 85 percent of the state's population - about 2.3 million - were tuned into the game.

"Some people said it was the talk of the town," Cahill said. "It was the highest watched Super Bowl ever. It was the highest television watched show ever. We had over 2.3 million people in Massachusetts who were watching the Super Bowl and the response has been great."

"It energized people and it was different. People usually don't kick off their campaigns with Super Bowl ads. They usually do it at Faneuil Hall or some place traditional and this is a non-traditional campaign."

The ad spot appeared just before the start of the second half kick-off that featured a turning point in the game. New Orleans opted for an on-side kick to start the third quarter, surprising the Indianapolis Colts. The Saints recovered the kick and mounted their 31-17 comeback win.

The ad and on-side kick analogy was not lost on Cahill.

"We like to think of (the ad) as the on-side kick of the campaign. It kind of shook people up, they didn't see it coming, and so far it's worked."

Asked what the deciding issue for voters will be in the governor's race, Cahill quickly answered: "The economy. It's all about jobs and it's about taxes and keeping taxes down so that businesses can start hiring people."

"People need to work. It's as simple as that. We can provide a plan, a vision for the state that changes directions and it focuses primarily on creating jobs, we'll win. The key will be to get to work on that proposal and that vision right away."

"We can't waste time. There are 300,000 people who are not working in this state. Even those people who are working don't feel secure about their futures. We have to make them more secure."

"We have to make the state more competitive but it's all about the economy and jobs. Whichever one of us (the gubernatorial candidates) can provide that plan and that vision and it looks like they're willing to fight for it will win."

Cahill said his campaign fundraiser is going well and is on target.

"We still have more money than anyone else in this campaign. We don't have to waste it on conventions or primaries so we will have as much money as we need to compete and we are competing every single month. We raised more money last month - over $170,000 - than any month other than our initial month in the campaign."

"We have over $3.25 million in the bank which is three times more than the closest Republican and four times what Gov. Deval Patrick has. At the end of the day, it's not how much you raise it's how much you're banking because you need that money in September and October to spend on TV (ad spots).

"I think we'll go in there with as much if not more than anyone else," Cahill continued. "Everything is going according to plan. It hasn't been easy and we're still convincing people that an independent can win and should be in consideration. The last few weeks have been phenomenal especially this week with the Super Bowl ad and now finishing this week off with the signature drive."

"I'm excited. We just have to keep working at it. We have to keep being creative. We have to do things non-traditional. Like the on-side kick to start the second half, those kind of things can win the game for you, especially if you execute them."

Souther Tide Mill Public Meeting Feb. 25

Friends of the Souther Tide Mill, Inc. will hold a public information meeting Thursday, Feb. 25 at 7 p.m. at the Quincy Point Congregational Church Fellowship Hall, 444 Washington St., Quincy Point.

Topics will include up-to-date information and present plans on the Souther Tide Mill restoration project and seek input and public support for this urgent historic preservation assignment. All Quincy residents are invited to join who are concerned that these historic structures and land areas valuable natural resources are protected. Residents also have an opportunity to join the Friends at this meeting.

The Mill is sitting on the busy Southern Artery on the former Quincy Lumber Company and next to the Town River Bay.

Souther Tide Mill is one of the last and only tide mill in the United States which still retains both a historic gristmill and sawmill.

Souther Tide is an important part of Quincy's history along with its granite and shipbuilding history along its significant waterfront and estuary.

The public is invited to view the informative presentation and to give input and support for the Mill's preservation.

Broad Meadows PTO Comedy Show Feb. 26

Broad Meadows Middle School PTO will host a Comedy Night, Friday, Feb. 26 from 7 to 11 p.m. at the Quincy Sons of Italy, 120 Quarry St., West Quincy.

The event will feature Boston, New York and Las Vegas headliners Tommy Dunham, Christine Hurley and Jerry Thornton.

Dunham has headlined clubs all over the Northeast for more than 20 years. His act involves growing up on the South Shore in the 1970s as well as parenting today.

Hurley was the first runner-up in the nationally televised "Nick-at-Nite" search for America's Funniest Mom contest in 2005. Her humor is primarily observational that most can identify with. She has the ability to find amusement and humor in everyday situations.

Thornton, a former winner of the WBCN Boston Comedy Riot Competition, has worked with national headliners Lenny Clarke, Steven Wright and Anthony Clark.

In addition to his comedy, Thornton has also appeared on HBO in the award-winning Red Sox documentary,

Formal Process To Begin In A Few Weeks

Committee Will Advise Board Of Governors In Search For New President

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The search for a new president for Quincy College should begin in the next few weeks, according to David Dennis, Chairman of the Board of Governors.

"We elected to go into a formal search process,"

Dennis said Monday before describing the structure of the seven-member committee which will conduct a national search through advertising and higher education channels.

The committee will include five persons chosen by Dennis, and one each by the college faculty and administrators, according to Dennis.

Dennis plans to announce

his five choices for the search committee by the end of this week and said the Board of Governors wants the process underway immediately and the search "done as quickly as possible...."

The Board of Governors formalized plans for selecting a new president at its

Feb. 11 meeting when members, also, voted to appoint Dr. James Magee as advisor to the search committee.

"He's going to help facilitate the process," said Dennis of Magee who is currently advising Quincy College on governance and accreditation issues.

The new president will replace current president Sue Harris who is retiring after 19 years at Quincy College. Harris served 15 years in the top spot and 14 years as teacher and administrator.

During her tenure, Harris is credited with establishing a solid reputation for the college, increasing enrollment and stabilizing finances.

Harris worked with the board in launching the college's first major efforts toward independence from the City of Quincy.

Independence will be a major goal for the next president as the accrediting agency has given the college ten years to separate from the city.

Insurance STRATEGIES

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

Many of today's storage facilities are gated off and boast climate-controlled environments. If you plan to use such a facility, it remains important to investigate insurance coverage for your possessions. Please call JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY at 617-328-8600 if we can assist you with off-premises insurance coverage. We have served the North Quincy community for 53 years and look forward to addressing your insurance questions. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street. Smarter Choice! Smarter Move!

If you are considering placing some or all of your possessions in a storage facility, you want to be sure that they will be adequately protected by insurance. The storage provider's contract is the first place to check exactly what is covered. Beyond that, you should check your homeowners (or renter's) insurance policy. Some provide off-premises protection, but it is often limited to 10% of the total coverage amount. Moreover, protection generally does not extend to damage resulting from floods, earthquakes, mold, mildew, vermin, or poor maintenance. Additionally, there may be limits on coverage for stored valuables such as jewelry, art, antiques, and furs. Consult with your insurance agent prior to committing personal items to a storage facility.

NOTE: Before transferring personal possessions to a storage facility, take a photographic or video inventory of the items to be kept, along with all pertinent sales slips and receipts

Stadium Sports Bar & Grill Takes Top Honors

The Stadium Sports Bar & Grill took home the title of Quincy's Chili Champion last weekend at the first annual "Chili Lovers Chili Cook-off," held recently at Houghs Neck Congregational Church.

The Stadium's spicy chili – garnished with a piece of bacon – took First Place in the restaurant division, which included half a dozen local restaurants. Second Place went to Coop's Bar and Grill, while Rock Island Food Company's lobster chili took Third Place.

Among the individual entries, First Place went to Jayne Wall, whose extended family cheered loudly when her chili was proclaimed the winner. Jennifer Logue took Second Place with her three-bean-and-beer beef chili, while Diana Rubin's turkey chili took Third Place.

"The event was a huge success," chairperson Laurie Pavidis said, adding that more than 200 people braved the cold to attend the cook-off. "It was wonderful to see such a great turnout on a cold January day, and everyone had a fantastic time."

DIANA RUBIN'S turkey chili garnished with scallions and cheddar cheese took third place out of nearly 20 individual entries.

In addition to the chili cook-off, the event also featured hot dogs, snacks, a bake sale and children's entertainment as well as pre-packaged chili that could be taken home and enjoyed later. And plans are already underway for next year's cook-off.

Noted Pavidis: "Quite a few people told us they can't wait until next year!"

HELPING TO SERVE chili to more than 200 attendees are Jennifer Logue, David Logue and Christine Keating. Logue's three-bean-and-beer chili took second place in the individual division.

CITY COUNCIL PRESIDENT Kevin Coughlin helps serve chili for some of the restaurant entries. Ward 5 Councilor Doug Gutro also served chili at the event.

A Job Well Done

On Tuesday Feb. 9, at approximately 10:45 a.m., Officers Kevin DiMattio and Paul Matthews responded to the Walgreen's parking lot on Adams Street for a suspicious male party looking into vehicles in the parking lot.

The Quincy Police Dispatcher provided responding units with a description of the suspect, then told the Officers that the caller just said that the suspect pushed a female to the ground and fled. An ambulance was then dispatched to the scene to examine the victim.

As the Officers neared the scene, Officer John Grazioso Sr. reported that he had a suspect detained at Adams and Common Street, just a short distance from where the assault occurred. Officer Matthews responded to the suspect's location while Officer DiMattio responded to the victim's location. Officer John O'Donnell heard the latest broadcast and proceeded to the suspect's location to assist the other officers.

As Officer Grazioso attempted to pat-frisk the suspect down, the suspect became wild eyed and started jumping around, refusing to cooperate. When the other officers arrived on scene, the suspect took his right hand and began to reach for something.

Officer O'Donnell, fearing that the suspect was going for a weapon, grabbed the suspect's right arm and as he did this, the suspect used his left fist to punch the Officer in the face. The other Officers jumped on the suspect and brought him to the ground, where he continued to struggle until mace was used. The suspect was placed under arrest for assaulting the Officers. Upon arrival at Walgreen's, Officer DiMattio found a small group of people in the middle of the parking lot. The officer examined the victim, a 63 year old female, who appeared very upset and suffered from injuries to the back of her head and right elbow. The victim stated that as she pulled into a parking space, she noticed the suspect was standing in the space blocking her path. The suspect moved out of her way and waved her into the space. As she parked her vehicle, she took her key set out of the ignition and opened her car door.

Once her door opened, the suspect surprised her by reaching into her vehicle demanding her car keys. The suspect demanded the keys, then pulled her from the vehicle, again demanding her keys. The suspect then threw the female to the ground, where she hit the back of her head on the pavement. She also injured her right elbow while breaking her fall. While on her back, the female yelled for help and tried to get up to run from the suspect. At that time, several people heard her cries for help and came to her aid. The suspect casually walked away from the scene. The female said that she held her keys tightly so that the suspect could not steal her car.

While the Fallon Ambulance EMTs treated the female, Officer DiMattio interviewed two witnesses. Witness #1 said that he first observed the suspect looking into several parked vehicles in the Walgreen's lot, so he called the Police to report the activity. Witness #1 said he observed the Walgreen's store manager, witness #2, come out to the parking lot and walk towards the suspect's location. He then witnessed the suspect assault the victim, so he ran to her aid. He said that numerous people came to her aid and yelled at the suspect, who then left his position standing over the female to slowly walking away.

According to the store manager, a few minutes earlier an elderly female entered the store to report a suspicious male looking into cars in the lot. As he came outside of the store to investigate, he heard a woman yelling, "help - help - help!" then saw her fall to the ground. The store manager said that he heard the suspect angrily say, "where are the G@# $%^ keys?" He told the suspect to leave and watched him as he casually walked away from the scene as though nothing happened.

Officer DiMattio brought witnesses over to the ambulance the suspect was in and they confirmed that the suspect was the same man who assaulted the female victim.

The suspect, a 23 year old Boston resident, refused treatment and was charged with "Carjacking, Assault and Battery on an Elderly Person (over 60), Assault and Battery on a Police Officer (2 counts) and Resisting Arrest."

While at the Quincy Police station being booked, Officers found the following items in his pockets: A women's watch, one Honda ignition key w/ remote, one Garmin GPS w/ charger and one Visa HarborOne credit union debit card.

The Boston Police responded to the Quincy Police department to determine if the man arrested could be the same suspect of an earlier carjacking in their city. This question was resolved quickly after matching up the name on the debit card to the owner of the vehicle that was carjacked and secondly, that the key belonged to the car that was stolen. The GPS was also taken from the vehicle in Boston. This property was released to Boston Police for their investigation.

The suspect was subsequently charged with "Receiving Stolen Property over $250.00 and Receiving a stolen credit card." Officers O'Donnell, Matthews and Grazioso Sr. all received treatment at Quincy Medical Center for mace exposure and minor injuries. After being treated for their injuries, all officers returned to their beats.

Stains Mar Plastic Lawn Furniture

Q I have some plastic lawn furniture that has a few stains on it. Some look like grass or mud stains, while on a couple of chairs there are burn marks from where some of my friend's cigarettes accidentally touched the chair legs. Can I get rid of these stains and marks, or should I just replace the whole set? — Terri in San Diego

A Whether to fix or to replace the furniture depends on a few factors. If new lawn furniture isn't in your budget and the chairs are structurally sound, then consider minor repairs and cleaning. If, however, you're looking for a reason to redecorate the back patio, start looking around for replacements.

Some types of plastic furniture are built so that parts can be replaced. Check the manufacturer's Web site or with outdoor furniture specialty stores to see if parts are available for your model.

Cigarette burns are a tough repair, as they mar the plastic and leave a permanent scorch mark. You may be able to smooth the gouge away by pressing a warm (not hot) iron — one you don't intend to use on clothes anymore — against the area for a few seconds and then smoothing the gouge with a putty knife, repeating until the area is fairly smooth.

Cleaning stains from the furniture is problematic. Scrubbing plastic isn't advised because you can damage the surface, and using chemicals — even bleach, vinegar or lemon juice — to try and remove the stain may be a problem, too. If the stains won't come out with plain old dishwashing soap and warm water, they may be permanent.

Some plastic furniture owners solve this by repainting the furniture. If you take this road, look for a paint specifically designed for smooth plastic or plastic furniture (other paints tend to flake off) and repaint in a well-ventilated area.

If you decide to just replace the furniture, spend some time looking for bargains. Local online classifieds often carry listings for used patio furniture that's for sale or, in some cases, free. Some excellent lawn furniture tends to hit the curbs around the end of the month as renters move into or out of properties, so keep an eye out.

Also, if you replace the set, try to either give away the old plastic furniture or take it to a recycling facility.

HOME TIP: Plastic furniture is generally low-maintenance, but should be wiped down regularly to remove dirt and standing water.

Seven-Game Turnaround This Season

Lady Presidents Are Back In The Postseason

By SEAN BRENNAN

A second-place finish in the Patriot League's Fisher Division, combined with an impressive 11-9 overall record has squarely placed the Quincy Presidents in the Division I South postseason field.

The tournament pairings will be announced on Friday. The Presidents, as of press time, were in line to play a preliminary round game, possibly at home, early next week; but that scenario is currently fluid. The Division I South field is still up for grabs and Quincy very well could skip the preliminary round and head straight into a first-round round game.

"We are starting to play better as a team," said QHS head coach Jeff Bretsch on Tuesday. "The girls are playing good team defense, and fundamentally we are a better team than we were earlier in the season."

"As the Division I South field is currently set up it is looking like we will be playing in the preliminary round. But that really all depends on how the rest of the week shapes up. There is still a chance that we will not have to play in that round and just start with a first round game, but, truthfully, we will not know that until Friday when they announce the pairings."

"If we do have to play in the opening round, it would be quickly, sometime early next week. It would be fun, if we have to play an early game, to have it be at home, but that comes down to a coin flip. We are in a waiting period."

For a team that finished last season with a 4-16 overall record, this year's edition made great strides. The team's seven-game improvement is a big step in the right direction, and the future of the program is on solid footing as the Presidents have a number of underclassmen who should only continue to improve more next year.

"To win seven more games than last year and qualify for the postseason is good for the program," added Bretsch. "We have a number of underclassmen who have stepped up their games this year and with real good senior leadership leading the way we have had a successful season. Being back in the postseason is going to be fun."

Quincy earned their spot following a gusty 44-41 victory over Rockland HS on Feb. 9. Rockland had previously defeated the Presidents, 42-30, on Jan. 5. The contest was tied at 30-30 at halftime, but Quincy battled down the stretch, hitting ten straight free throws in the fourth quarter to come away with the big division win.

Sophomore center Kiley McDonald finished the game with 16 points and 12 rebounds. Her double double was her sixth in seven games. Senior Colleen Tobin finished with 11 points.

"That was a big game and an even bigger win," said Bretsch. "They are a scrappy team and played good defense against us, but, down the stretch, we played well and never allowed them to grab the lead."

"It was good to beat them as they had already defeated us earlier in the year. Not only did it give us our tenth win and qualify us for the postseason, but the win knocked them out of contention for the playoffs."

The Presidents closed out their regular season with a 47-37 victory over Middleboro HS last Thursday. McDonald finished with 12 points and sophomore guard Juli Tomer added 10 points including seven clutch points in the fourth quarter. Junior point guard Kori Sorensen scored eight points for Quincy.

"That was an ugly game, and they played us tough," said Bretsch. "In the first game, we jumped out to a 27-point lead, but this game was a battle all the way through. We did lead the entire way, but the game was in question until the end."

When the playoffs do get underway sometime next week, Quincy is not going to be a team to take lightly. The Presidents have a formidable post game with McDonald, Tobin and senior Olivia Berry manning the paint and the team's perimeter game is strong as well with Sorensen, Tomer and senior Julia Yee causing opposing teams all sorts of problems.

The wildcard is senior forward Leslie Campbell. Campbell plays an all-around strong game and can be deadly from the outside and inside.

"We have not really been consistent all-around as a team this season, but if we can find a way to play a strong game both inside and outside, we could be a tough out," added Bretsch. "With Kiley and Colleen we can apply pressure in the post and if our shooters get hot we can be a very tough team to beat. I am looking forward to seeing what we can do next week."

Notes: Quincy had three players named to the Patriot League's Fisher Division all-star team. Senior forward Leslie Campbell, junior point guard Kori Sorensen and sophomore center Kiley McDonald were named to the team.

THE QUINCY PRESIDENTS shutout the North Quincy Red Raiders, 3-0, last Saturday at the Quincy Youth Arena behind a shutout performance from goaltender Leroy Wallace and two goals from senior Seamus McKenna. Quincy, which played Hanover High School last night at the QYA, was scheduled to play Pembroke High School at 10 a.m. today (Thursday) at the Hobomock Ice Arena. The Presidents need to earn one-point (out of a potential four points) to qualify for the postseason tournament. Quincy High School head coach, Bob Sylvia, will retire after 44 years behind the bench at QHS at the conclusion of the season.

NQ Eliminated Following Loss To Sharon HS

Red Raiders Fall Just Short

By SEAN BRENNAN

After shocking Scituate High School, the top team in the Patriot League's Keenan Division, 72-71, on Feb. 11, and running their record to 8-9 overall, the North Quincy Red Raiders held a slim hope of qualifying for Division I South postseason tournament. That dream came crashing down following consecutive losses to New Bedford HS (73-60) and Sharon HS (72-63) in the Dudley Davenport Basketball Tournament earlier this week.

The Red Raiders, if they had been able to defeat Sharon HS on Monday night (the New Bedford contest was a game that did not count in the official standings), would have needed to defeat Whitman-Hanson HS tonight (Thursday) in order to reach that necessary ten-win cutoff line for qualification into the Division I South bracket; this game no longer holds any significance.

Against Sharon HS, a team that had yet to reach the 50-point mark all season, North Quincy trailed by three points at halftime, but a 7-0 scoring run by Sharon to open the second-half put the Raiders in a deep hole. North Quincy cut the deficit to four points in the fourth quarter, but could get no closer, losing a heartbreaker.

Seniors Jon Coates and Mike Stanton played outstanding against Sharon. Coates finished with 25 points and ten rebounds and Stanton had 24 points and 12 rebounds. Senior Ned Gould ended the game with seven points, five assists and five rebounds.

North Quincy's victory over Scituate High School was a shocker. The Sailors, with a 15-3 overall record, are one of the top seeds in the Division II South bracket, and the best team overall in the Keenan Division of the Patriot League. Not only did the Red Raiders beat them, North Quincy did it on the road on Senior Night. And the final score was not indicative of just how much better they were than the hosts.

North jumped out to a 22-17 first quarter lead as seniors Jon Coates and Mike Stanton scored nine and ten points, respectively. After outscoring the Sailors, 19-12, in the second quarter, North Quincy held a 24-point advantage entering the second half. Coates ended the first half with 20 points on six three-pointers and one layup.

After the third quarter, the Raiders' lead was 19 points. Stanton scored eight points in the quarter, Coates scored seven and senior Chris Delaney added four points. Entering the final quarter, North Quincy held a 62-43 lead.

The Sailors turned up the heat in the final quarter, outscoring the visitors 28-10, but North's large early game lead held up.

The Raiders didn't do themselves any favors at the free throw line in this quarter. The team finished the fourth quarter just 8-for-20 from the charity strip, but the end result was the same; an upset win that set the team up with a chance at qualifying for the tournament.

Coates finished with 27 points and eight rebounds and Stanton went for 34 points and 29 rebounds (not a misprint).

Earlier last week, North Quincy dropped a 68-65 decision to Duxbury HS at home. Stanton finished the game with 17 points and 12 rebounds and Coates went off for 33 points on eight three pointers, including 13 points in the third quarter.

North Quincy will miss the tournament this season. Looking back at the season there are close losses that tell the story why. The Raiders fell to Whitman-Hanson, 66-63, on Dec. 18; lost 60-54 to Pembroke HS on Jan. 22; lost to Rockland HS, 52-47, on Jan. 29 and lost to Duxbury, 68-65, last week.

That is four tough losses by a combined 17 points. A bucket or a defensive stop here or there and North Quincy would have qualified for the postseason.

USCG Boating Skills and Seamanship Course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary will be holding a Boating Skills and Seamanship (BS & S) course, beginning Tuesday, March 2 at the Braintree Yacht Club, 9 Gordon Road, Braintree.

Preregistration is encouraged, as the course tends to fill quickly.

For additional information, contact either William Fuller FSO-PE at 781-848-2906 or LWVFJ@verizon.net or Matthias Mulvey FVC at 781-331-0043 or at info@mulvey.cc

Registration should be completed by Feb. 26.

NQHS Cheerleading Clinic

The North Quincy High School cheerleading squad will be holding a Cheer Clinic on Feb. 27 from 9 a.m. until 12 Noon at Atlantic Middle School in North Quincy.

The clinic is open to all children ages 4-13; the cost of the clinic is $30 and all participants will receive instruction on cheering, dancing, tumbling and stunting. A t-shirt and bow will be included in the price.

To preregister, email or call Chrissy Burke at nqcheercoachchrissy@yahoo.com or at 617-833-8897.

Qualified After Defeating Rockland HS Last Week Presidents Earn Their Spot In Postseason

By SEAN BRENNAN

The Quincy Presidents, on the strength of a second place finish in the Patriot League's Fisher Division, have qualified for the Division II post-season. To begin the playoffs, Quincy (9-10 overall as of Feb. 16) will have to play a preliminary round game, as the team will be one of the lowest seeds in the field.

Tournament pairing will be announced on Friday.

The Presidents clinched their spot, following an impressive 55-48 victory over Fisher Division regular season champion Rockland High School on Feb. 9. The team ended its league schedule with a 63-44 decision over Middleboro High School last Thursday.

"We are in and that is a nice step," said QHS head coach David Parry. "At this point we are going to take it one game at a time. We will be playing in a preliminary round game to start off and that very well could be against Pembroke High School depending on how the end of the season plays out."

"But we are playing better than we were earlier in the season and that really started during our five-game losing streak last month. We played really well in the second half against Whitman-Hanson HS (Jan. 19); the team played well, even being shorthanded in the next game against Scituate HS (65-51 loss) and against Duxbury, who we lost to by ten points, our inside game was really working and it gave us some confidence."

Quincy, after dropping a tough 67-66 game to Hingham HS on Jan. 29, was in a win-or-go-home scenario. So, that is exactly what the Presidents did. They rattled off a five-game winning streak, against Fisher Division foes, and earned their seed in the tournament.

The clutch winning streak started with a 61-47 victory over Pembroke HS on Feb. 1; a 66-65 win over Randolph HS on Feb. 5 was followed by a 65-60 win against Hanover HS. Quincy then traveled to Rockland and surprised the Bulldogs, winning by seven points, and closed out the season with the win over Middleboro.

"That five game stretch against teams in our division, when we knew that finishing in second place in the Fisher Division would qualify us really was a confidence booster," added Parry. "We knew that we had to win every game and that win over Rockland was the biggest one. They are the best team in the division and we went there and really played well."

"It came down to that five game stretch and we took care of business."

The Presidents played on Monday night against Nauset HS in the first round of the Vin Moscardelli Tournament, held at North Quincy High School. Quincy dropped that game and was scheduled to play in the consolation game on Tuesday night against Hyde Park HS. Milton HS faced Nauset HS in the championship game.

"Nauset is a well coached team that runs a set offense," said Parry. "When we play Hyde Park they like to play an up-and-down game so it will be good to see two different types of styles before starting the tournament."

"We have been hanging in there all season and it feels good to have done enough work to earn out spot in the tournament."

Notes: Depending on the outcome of the Randolph HS-Archbishop Williams HS game on Tuesday, the Division II postseason could have two preliminary round games... Quincy could very well play Pembroke HS in a preliminary round game. The Presidents are 2-0 against the Titans this season, having already defeated them 60-59 on Dec. 15 and 61-47 on Feb. 1. Despite being 2-0 against Pembroke this season, if it came down to these two teams, the preliminary round home team would be decided by a coin flip.

Urbanus Wins; Q/NQ Relay Sets New School Record

Sophomore Taryn Urbanus won the diving competition and the Quincy/North Quincy High School 200-yard freestyle relay team established a new school record at the Central/South Sectional Swimming and Diving Meet on Feb. 13 at the Zesiger Sports & Fitness Center on the M.I.T. campus in Cambridge.

Urbanus, on the heels of her Patriot League diving championship and her selection to the all-league team, amassed 377.154 points in the 11-dive competition on Sunday.

Q/NQ's 200-yard freestyle relay team clocked a time of 1:52.20, bettering its previous school record of 1:57.22, which was set on Jan. 26. Seniors Danielle Urbanus and Hannah Flattery, junior Hillary Wong and freshman Kat O'Connor make up the relay team and the foursome combined to finish in 17th place at the sectional meet. The same foursome collaborated for a season-best, unofficial time of 4:11.82 in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

Junior co-captain Kendra Johnston returned to action from illness, swimming 2:31.92 for 26th place in the 200-yard individual relay and 1:10.87 for 22nd place in the 100-yard backstroke. Johnston currently holds the Quincy High School record in both of these events.

Freshman Kat O'Connor finished 41st in the 100-yard freestyle with a time of 1:02.22.

Johnston, sophomore Jessica O'Donovan, Flattery and O'Connor finished in 22nd place with a time of 2:07.97 in the 200-yard medley relay.

Both Taryn Urbanus and Johnston are set to compete in the Girls Division I State Swimming and Diving Championships on Sunday, Feb. 20 at Blodgett Pool on the Harvard University campus. Johnston will participate in the 100-yard backstroke and Urbanus will participate in the diving event.

NQ Girls Hoops Finish Year

The North Quincy Red Raiders closed out their season with 61-38 loss to Scituate High School on Feb. 11. The team finished the year with a disappointing 3-16 overall record and a 2-13 record in the Patriot League.

Earlier last week, North Quincy dropped a 65-45 decision to Duxbury High School. Leading the way for the Red Raiders were Kelsey Powers (14 points, eight rebounds), Montana McBirney (11 points, 13 rebounds) and Anna Holcomb (nine points, six rebounds).

Powers' 14-point game set a career-high in points scored. McBirney recorded her third double-double of the season with her 11 point-13 rebound game.

Notes: Montana McBirney was named to the Patriot League All-Star team. Senior Anna Holcomb participated in the three-point contest. The all-star festivities were held last Friday night.

Granite Links Golf Club Named New England 'Course of the Year'

The National Golf Course Owners Association (NGCOA), at its annual meeting, held in San Diego, California on Feb. 11, recognized Granite Links Golf Club as its winner of the "2010 Course of the Year" for the New England region.

The NGCOA "Course of the Year" award honors member clubs that demonstrate excellence across the following four criteria: exceptional quality of the course; exceptional management; outstanding contribution to its community, and significant contribution to the game.

Each NGCOA regional organization selects a Chapter "Course of the Year" and each course is then considered a finalist for National Course of the Year; all winners are regarded as model operations to their peers.

Brad MacDonald, Head Superintendent at Granite Links GC, representing Granite Links GC's general manager, Walter Hannon III, and club owners, William O'Connell, Peter O'Connell, Tom O'Connell and Charles Geilich, collectively of Quarry Hills Associates, accepted the award for the club.

"We're honored by this designation," said Hannon last week, "and pleased to be able to send Brad to receive the award on our behalf. He and his team provide such great care and superlative maintenance to our course and we're keenly aware that this is a critical contributing factor to all the wonderful recognition Granite Links has been getting."

Kevin F. Osgood, President of the New England Golf Course Owners Association said: "Granite Links is to be commended for not just persevering during one of the most challenging economic times our industry has seen, but actually prospering and growing. It's a real testament to the quality of golf experience they're offering that demand for tee times has not waned and desire for new membership enrollments is still so strong."

Green Tea and Vitamin D – Cancer Prevention At Your Table?

While cancer prevention in the future may never be as simple as sipping green tea or eating watermelon, a researcher at the University of Wisconsin Carbone Cancer Center (UWCCC) says that more specific study of nutrients and vitamins for cancer prevention is the next big frontier in cancer research.

"In our research on green tea and a nutrient in broccoli, we've discovered that both appear to have some beneficial effects on certain tissues, and that they are safe. But we're still studying whether either or both actually prevent cancer," says Dr. Howard Bailey, professor of medicine at the UW School of Medicine and Public Health. Bailey, also a practicing oncologist, is one of the main investigators for a multi-center National Cancer Institute study of soy products, green tea, vitamin D and a compound associated with certain fruits and vegetables.

Very few nutrients have been proven to have cancer-prevention characteristics, but a handful of drugs have shown promising results in clinical trials or have been proven to prevent certain cancers. Tamoxifen, originally developed to treat breast cancer, and raloxifene, first used to prevent osteoporosis, can reduce the risk of breast cancer for high-risk women. Another FDA-approved cancer-prevention drug is the HPV vaccine for cervical cancer.

While research on drugs for chemoprevention has made progress, Bailey says the study of nutrients lags behind. He says there are several theories about why there's so much to learn about potential disease-prevention characteristics of nutrients.

"Because we've been exposed to nutrients and vitamins for ages, any potential health advantage to consuming them is likely to be modest. Early on, we thought we could increase the effect by increasing the dose or amount of nutrient or vitamin taken. However, the old adage about 'too much of a good thing' may apply."

Bailey says he and other researchers will try to determine the level of nutrients or vitamins needed to be effective in prevention of specific cancers. He is currently researching the effective dosage of nutrients and vitamins like green tea and vitamin D for specific diseases, including bladder and prostate cancers.

He also plans to explore the idea that a one-time, large dose of vitamin D is safe and has prostate cancer-prevention properties. For more information on clinical trials at the UWCCC, go to www.uwhealth.org/cancertrials

Don't Let Aches, Pains Slow You Down

(ARA) - We all know the feeling that comes with the first great day of spring. When the sun is shining, the air smells sweet and fresh and the temperatures are warm, we all feel the urge to get outside and throw off the confinement of the winter months. Whether you're an avid athlete, a dedicated gardener or someone who's been meaning to get started on an exercise program, the arrival of spring is one sure way to get you moving.

No one is immune from the desire to get outdoors and do something active while enjoying the weather - and that includes people with chronic pain issues. Whether you're dealing with arthritis or trying to treat carpal tunnel syndrome, the threat of pain is one of the most challenging obstacles to overcome for those who want to live an active lifestyle, because no one wants to take the risk of aggravating their health problems.

But even if you're living with pain, it's essential to heed the call of the outdoors this spring and be active. There are plenty of ways to mitigate pain issues and avoid further injury. The important thing is to consult your doctor and to work out a plan together that will let you get the exercise you want and need without worsening your pain. And, in fact, exercising can be an important part of overcoming some of those issues - as long as it's done in the right way.

There are a lot of activities that we all love to do that require a lot of repetitive motion. Tennis is a popular sport for all ages, and a game that can be played over a lifetime, but for people suffering from joint pain and carpal tunnel syndrome (CTS), the repeated swinging motions required for a good volley can drive them off the court.

Similarly, gardeners eager to get their hands in the dirt can be limited by pain that crops up with the repetitive motion involved in tilling, preparing beds, digging and planting. For people suffering from CTS, whether they are gardeners, tennis players or otherwise, supportive gloves can provide the relief they need.

According to the Mayo Clinic, exercise is an important part of dealing with back pain. Not only does it strengthen the muscles and joints, but it can stretch contracted muscles, improve posture and even help protect against injury by improving your overall fitness.

Another health problem that exercise can positively affect is arthritis. When you go outside and start being active this spring, you can help your arthritis with activities like tai chi, strengthening exercises and cardio exercise that get your heart working. It's recommended that you protect your joints by warming them up prior to exercise, and by being gentle on your body - starting out too hard and fast can cause problems. Support products like IMAK's SmartGlove can also help you stay in good alignment as you work out.

Don't resist the urge to soak in the sunshine because of pain and discomfort this spring. Not only is getting outside easier than ever with supportive therapies, but it's an essential part of living a healthier, pain-free life.

Macular Degeneration and Cataract Surgery

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Is it possible to get wet macular degeneration from a scratch on the left eye during cataract surgery, or could it have been a cyst that caused wet macular degeneration? I am 85, and my right eye is perfect. I had cataract surgery on that eye also. - C.

ANSWER: A scratch on the eye isn't likely to cause macular degeneration. The possibility of cataract surgery leading to macular degeneration is a remote one. More than 6,000 people who had had a cataract removed were followed for five years after the operation. Slightly more people who had the operation developed macular degeneration, dry or wet, in the operated eye than did a similar group of people who had not had an operation.

This isn't proof that cataract surgery leads to macular degeneration. The same risks that cause cataracts also cause macular degeneration. The numbers that do develop it after cataract removal are small. A cause-and-effect relationship has not been proven.

I am not clear what you mean by a cyst causing the degeneration. In what part of the eye was the cyst? I have not seen a link between cysts and macular degeneration.

The retina is the back layer of the eye, the layer that converts incoming images into nerve signals that can be transmitted to the brain so we can see. The macula is a small, round area of the retina where there's an aggregation of cells that are essential for central vision - the kind of vision needed to read a paper, watch TV and drive.

Dry macular degeneration, accounting for 85 percent to 90 percent of cases, is a wasting away of macular cells. Wet macular degeneration results from a sprouting of blood vessels in that region. Those newly formed blood vessels leak fluid and destroy macular vision. Procedures are available that can halt the progression of wet macular degeneration.

The booklet on macular degeneration explains both kinds and what is available to help those with this common eye problem. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue - No. 701W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I need some basic facts about the pulse. First, what's considered a normal rate? I have trouble finding my pulse. I feel all over my wrist, but it's hard for me to detect. Is there some other place where I can feel it better? - C.M.

ANSWER: The pulse rate and the rate of the heartbeat are one and the same. When the heart beats, it ejects blood into arteries. The force of that ejection runs down all artery walls and is the pulse beat. A normal pulse (or heart rate) is 60 to 100 beats a minute.

You feel the pulse on the thumb side of the wrist. Maybe you're pressing too hard and obliterating it. If you can't find it there, you can feel it in the neck, slightly below the angle of the jaw. Or you can put your hand over your heart and count the heartbeats.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

ACS Seeks People To Drive Patients To Treatment

Sometimes the biggest challenge in cancer treatment is getting there.

Thankfully, the American Cancer Society is here to help with a committed group of individuals who drive patients to nearby treatment centers to get the care they need. But according to the Society, many volunteer drivers have headed south for the cold weather months, leaving many cancer patients without rides to the treatment they need now.

The American Cancer Society is currently seeking volunteers from every town in Southeastern Massachusetts to drive cancer patients to their treatment appointments. "If you have a car, and even one hour once a month, you can make a real difference in someone's life by becoming a driver," explains Bagley.

A cancer patient who needs radiation therapy might require between 20 and 30 trips to the clinic within six weeks. A patient receiving chemotherapy might report for treatment weekly for up to a year. Treatment can make a patient feel too sick to drive. In many cases, a patient is driven to hospitals and clinics by relatives or friends, but occasionally they need to seek alternative transportation. That's where Road to Recovery, an American Cancer Society community program, helps.

One Hour Once A Month Volunteer drivers receive simple training and an orientation from the American Cancer Society, and are asked to volunteer for at least one hour, one day, once a month. The Society matches drivers' availability with the needs of patients who call.

For more information, or to volunteer as a Road to Recovery driver, contact your American Cancer Society at 1-800-227-2345 or visit cancer.org.

GETTING ON YOUR NERVES

As if the demands of modern-day living were not enough to cause stress, the current state of the economy has led many people to their near breaking points. Research points out that a continuous reaction to stress triggers a "fight-or-flight" response, placing many unnerved individuals in an untenable position. Since most choose neither to fight nor run away from their problems, they are caught in a tense emotional state. This can lead to self-medication with drugs (including nicotine) and/or alcohol, which only serve to temporarily smother the problem. As an alternative, chiropractic offers a natural approach to healing by unblocking and unleashing the force of the nervous system to rid the body of nervous symptoms.

Chiropractic is a healing art based on the scientific fact that your nervous system controls the function of virtually every cell, tissue, organ, and system of your body. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, we locate and treat areas of the spine that are interfering with the nervous system. Our mission is to improve quality of life by facilitating healing in a compassionate, caring and friendly environment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy, where our purpose is to support each individual in achieving his or her optimum health. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. No matter where you live in Eastern Mass., we can offer you exceptional chiropractic service.

P.S. Chronic stress tenses muscles, which, in turn, distort body structure that has the potential to irritate nerves.

Purim Events At Temple Shalom

The festive Jewish holiday of Purim will be celebrated at Temple Shalom of Milton with two special events on the weekend of February 27-28.

On Saturday night, the traditionally raucous Purim service and Megillah reading will be led by Rabbi Fred Benjamin from 6-7:15 p.m., followed by a Purim Ball & Movie Night from 7:30-10:30 p.m.

The Purim Ball is for adults and will feature Jimmy Jay the DJ, a belly dancer, raffles, cash bar, snacks and prizes for individual, couple theme and Purim theme costumes. While adults are having a ball at the Ball, kids will enjoy a free Disney classic film about a Persian boy who finds a genie in a lamp.

RSVP's are requested, with the adult donation $18 per person by Feb. 17, $20 per person after the 17th.

On Sunday morning, Feb. 28, the Megillah reading will be at 10:15 a.m., followed by a Purim Carnival and Costume Parade from 11-12:30.

The Carnival will feature games, booths, prizes, Persian Palace moon bounce, food and fun for all ages, and prizes for costumes.

It is open to the public with free admission and tickets for food and booths available for purchase.

The Megillah tells the Purim story of Esther and her uncle Mordecai, who saved their Jewish brethren in ancient Shushan from the evil designs of the wicked Haman. Children wear costumes and listen carefully to the Hebrew text so they can use noisemakers to drown out the name of Haman every time it is uttered.

Temple Shalom of Milton is a handicapped-accessible egalitarian congregation which conducts a full schedule of religious services throughout the year, and operates a religious school for Jewish children of all grade levels. In addition, the synagogue has a full calendar of cultural, educational and social events throughout the year.

Temple Shalom is located at 180 Blue Hill Avenue (Rte. 138) in Milton, with free parking. For further information call the temple office at 617-698-3394.

RELIGION

It's Now The Covenant Church Of Quincy

This year marks the 125th anniversary of the founding of The Covenant Church on Whitwell Street in Quincy.

At a recent annual meeting of the congregation actions were taken to celebrate this important year in the life of the church.

Joyce Haglund, a Quincy resident, was elected chairwoman of the congregation. Her family members were some of the founding members of the congregation. The ministry of the church's Children's Pantry was highlighted. The Children's Pantry serve families with children by providing clothing, toys, books and supplies.

The community is welcome to visit.

In this 125th year the decision was also made to change the name of the church. No longer Covenant Congregational Church, the church members decided on the name "The Covenant Church of Quincy."

"It better reflects who we are, said Rev. Karen Palmatier, pastor of the congregation. "One hundred and twenty five years ago, the Congregationalists helped educate Covenant pastors and supported several Covenant congregations in other ways.

"We are grateful for our heritage, but there was never any denominational connection. We have always been a member church of The Evangelical Covenant Church."

The members of the congregation also have plans to celebrate this important milestone by supporting local and global ministries with their time and gifts. The Quincy Crisis Center, Rice Eventide Home, New England Seafarer's Mission in Boston, and Covenant World Relief are just some of the ministries that will be supported this year by the congregation.

"We have a new name, but our desire to share the Good News with our community has not changed in 125 years," Rev. Palmatier said.

For more information, call 617-479-5728.

OBITUARIES

E. Louise Swanson, 93
Homemaker

A funeral service for E. Louise (MacKenzie) Swanson, 93, of Quincy, was conducted Monday at the Union Congregational Church, Quincy.

Her son, Rev. John Carl Swanson, Pastor, officiated. Mrs. Swanson died Feb. 10 at the Quincy Medical Center.

Born in Quincy Point, she was raised and educated in Quincy schools and was a 1934 graduate of Quincy High School. She was a lifelong Quincy resident.

She was a homemaker, but as a young woman she had worked as a medical secretary at the former Fore River Shipyard for the Bethlehem Steel Company prior to and during World War II. It was at the shipyard that she met her late husband; she later worked as a sales clerk in the sweater department at the former Quincy Bargain Center for 15 years.

Mrs. Swanson was a longtime active member of the Union Congregational Church in Quincy and served on several boards in addition to singing in the church choir. She was a member of the Daughter's of Scotia, Walter Scott Lodge 147 and the Braintree Eastern Star.

She also enjoyed crossword puzzles, reading and traveling to Scotland, Ireland, Europe and PEI, Canada; she was proud of her Scottish heritage and loved the bagpipes.

Mrs. Swanson was devoted to her family, especially her eleven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

When you think about it, there is nothing mysterious or complex about "human nature." Human nature is nothing other than human habits. Human nature is therefore changeable the same as human habits are changeable. Surprisingly, human nature is often mentioned to excuse personal offenses and misbehavior. It is equally surprising that the inherent goodness in man is seldom mentioned as human nature. The human habits of love, tolerance and respect are certainly as much of human nature as the faults of greed, distrust and other offensive vices. Actually, when you look around, you see far more love, trust and selflessness than hate, distrust and selfishness. In these troublesome times in human relation, it is still true that goodness exceeds the bad. And more importantly, it is good to stress that bad habits can be changed to good habits if a will to do so exists. In short, "human nature" can be changed. Just change "human habits."

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) There could be some negative reaction to your tough stance when making a recent decision. But overall, your efforts result in well-earned recognition and all that can follow from that.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your financial situation seems confusing, even for the fiscally savvy Bovine. Maybe it's the conflicting advice you're getting. Check it out before things get too tangled to untangle.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A relaxed attitude goes a long way in helping you deal with any of life's irritants that might be popping up this week. You're also a reassuring role model for others in the same situation.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Your aspect favors creativity, which should persuade you to work on your artistic projects. If time is a problem, prioritize your commitments so that your work isn't compromised.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Scrutinize all the job offers that interest you. Most are honest and worth considering. But a few might not be completely forthcoming about what the job is and what the salary and benefits are.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) An unexpected snafu could delay the completion of a project you're eager to finish. Find out what's causing it, fix it, and if you need help, don't be shy about asking for it. Good luck.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) An idea that could be helpful to you comes from an unlikely source. Listen to it. Discuss it. If necessary, adjust it. If it looks as if it might work out quite well, go ahead and use it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Be careful about allowing someone to share a very personal secret with you. This could cause problems down the line with others who are involved in that person's private life.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A cooling down of a relationship could be the result of neglect, unintended or not. To save it from icing over, you need to warm it up with a large dose of hot Sagittarius passion.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) This is a good time to get involved with a number of family matters that involve money and other issues that might jeopardize the closeness between and among family members.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Cheer up. That difficult person who appears to be deliberately stalling your project might just need to be reassured of the value she or he brings to it.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Good news! Expect to feel re-energized now that you've gone through that stressful energy-depleting period involving a lot of changes. Now, go out there and show them what you can do.

BORN THIS WEEK: You have a warm, giving nature that inspires many to follow your example.

Broad Meadows Raises $3,000 For Haiti

to help Haiti."

How did middle school students raise over $3,000 in a month? It was a team effort.

- Students purchased mini bottles of water raising over $1000

- $560 was raised from a student run drawing featuring: Red Sox tickets; a Wii; a signed Patriots jersey; dinner certificates for the Tahiti Restaurant and Joe's American Bar & Grille; free pizza certificates from Time Out Pizza; as well as free ice cream from Friendly's and Hood's. Students, parents and neighbors obtained the prizes from generous businesses in the area.

- Grade 8 student leader Liam Batson and his little brother raised over $1000 from the sale of hot cocoa at the hockey rink

- A donation jar in the cafeteria, one at the Bethany Congregational Church, some canning in Milton, and the sale of student made holiday craft items raised the rest

cis, Dana Varmahmoodi and Kim Driscoll, Jr.

Shauna Canavan, grade 8 leader, was scheduled to introduce Partners in Health, the other organization to be presented with a $1500 donation. Shauna had planned to say this: "Last school year, 2008-2009, the ODW students at BMMS and the students in all the ODW sister schools, www.odwusa.org, voted unanimously to partner for a year with Partners inHealth, a reputable, respected group working in Haiti with Haitians to bring education, hope and health care to 2000 Haitian children and their families. That partnership turned out to be a success."

Partners in Health was unable to attend, but plans to visit Broad Meadows soon to personally thank their 2008-2009 partners at Broad Meadows Middle School according to Katie Lamona, Partners in Health Administrative Assistant to Haiti Director Ali Lutz. Ali has been in Haiti for weeks and was thus unable to attend the assembly at Broad Meadows.

Concluding remarks were provided by grade 8 leader, John Batson: "Some people in the audience might at this moment feel great that they won a prize in the drawing. Some might be disappointed that they did not win a prize. The real winner here is Haiti. We did all this for Haiti."

Bethany Congregational

Bethany Congregational Church, 18 Spear St., Quincy Center, will have Sunday worship service and communion at 10 a.m.

The Rev. William C. Harding will preach.

Childcare will be available for infants and toddlers.

'Faith In Film' Series At Houghs Neck Church

Houghs Neck Congregational Church, 301 Manet Ave., Quincy, will begin a new series of free "Faith in Film" screenings Friday, March 19 at 6:30 p.m. with a screening of Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer Prize-winning Our Town.

Produced in 2003 for television, this production stars Paul Newman as the stage manager, who guides viewers through the joys and sorrows of everyday life in the small town of Grover's Corners, N.H.

The film series will continue through July, with free screenings at 6:30 p.m. on the third Friday of each month downstairs in the church's Fellowship Hall.

Other films scheduled to be screen are:

- East of Eden starring James Dean and Julie Harris, April 16.
 - Rodgers and Hammerstein's Carousel, May 21.
 - Bruce Almighty starring Jim Carrey, June 18.
 - The Trouble with Angels, July 16.
- A brief, informal discussion of the spiritual issues raised in the film will follow each screening.

Fellowship time in Allen Parlor will follow the worship service.

All are welcome.

The church is handicapped accessible.

"Contemporary movies offer a common reference point from which people of diverse spiritual backgrounds and faiths can explore the challenges we all face each day," said Rev. John Castricum, pastor of Houghs Neck Congregational Church.

Admission is free. A snack bar offering homemade soups, sandwiches, snacks and drinks opens at 6 p.m.

Founding Group Plans To Reapply State Rejects Proposed Hanlin Charter School

A decision to reject a proposed charter school will keep nearly $1 million in state funding within the city's public school system Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday but the Hanlin International Academy's Founding Group plans to reapply for a charter during next year's application cycle.

The state's rejection of a charter school seeking to recruit from the Asian American community also shows clearly the school system's commitment to "each and everyone of our students, regardless of their background," Koch said.

"We are one City, and one school system. The success rate of all of our students, including those in our Asian American community, shows that this kind of racial targeting would not only be inappropriate but unnecessary in Quincy," Koch said. "We are proud of our diversity, and there is not better example of that diversity that in our school system, and the state sent a clear message that it agrees with us."

State Education Commissioner Mitchell Chester did not recommend approval for the Hanlin International Academy, which was seeking to cater to students who were what it called "Native Americans." Among a series of concerns, Chester stated that the school did not

'Nothing Is Off The Table' Mayor Planning 'Difficult' Budget

Mayor Thomas Koch stated bluntly Tuesday that the city budget now being developed is likely to be "the most difficult amid the most difficult of times" as the city continues to fight through a historic recession.

As budget planning gets underway, Koch told The Sun that the administration's core principals of protecting the critical city services of public safety and education remain firm. But at the same time, the mayor believes the upcoming year's demands will almost undoubtedly mean substantial spending cuts, consolidation and tough choices.

"We are prepared, we are going to work through it, and we will ultimately emerge a stronger community. But make no mistake, this is going to be a historically challenging year," Koch said. "Nothing is off the table at this point."

The administration is planning a series of public meetings in the spring to discuss city finances in detail and to hear directly from residents about their spending priorities.

The current city budget reflects a $4 million decrease in spending from the last fiscal year, with total spending cuts adding up to several million dollars more because of increases in a

Would Be Erected In Milton 100-Foot From Granite Links Golf Course 450-Foot Wind Turbine Next 'Border Battle?'

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Border battles between Quincy and Milton have erupted again. This time, the dispute focuses on the 450-foot wind turbine that Milton wants to erect 100-feet from Granite Links Golf Course.

Under Milton's plans, the $6.2 million wind turbine will be built on town-owned land adjacent to the golf course.

"We're very very afraid," Bill O'Connell, president of Granite Links LLC, said Tuesday comparing the planned structure to a 50-story building just 80 feet from the award-winning golf course.

"It would affect Quincy's income directly," said O'Connell who fears the impact of sight and sound on

Koch Outlines 'Purchase Model' For Development $1B Downtown Project Will Pay For Itself, Officials Say

Mayor Thomas Koch Tuesday for the first time outlined the specifics of a unique strategy at the heart of downtown redevelopment negotiations that will require the project to essentially pay for itself, including roughly $250 million in public infrastructure at the core of the project.

Negotiations between the Koch administration and developer Street-Works, LLC revolve around what is called a "purchase model" of development, meaning that the public investment in the project is not triggered until specific components of the private development are complete and begin generating revenue.

The negotiating directive for both the City and Street-Works is clear, Koch said: New revenue generated by the project, from new tax growth to parking fees, must be enough to pay for the public improvements such as streets, sidewalks, underground utilities, and new parking garages required for the $1 billion project.

And there must be enough left over to generate a measure of new revenue every year that can funnel to city services such as public safety and education, Koch said.

"We are flipping traditional urban redevelopment on its head," Koch said. "Almost any project of this magnitude begins with a substantial public contribution as a means to entice private development. Under this model, the private investment comes first. This is how we protect our taxpayers, and in the end, this is how we have a project that creates the historic job creation and economic growth we believe is possible."

According to Koch, among the issues at the center of negotiations are: under what circumstances and price the City will allow Street-Works to develop the City-owned Ross Parking Garage and Hancock Parking Lot, what are the timelines and benchmarks that must be met for specific components to proceed; what is the specific mix of development that will meet the project's revenue requirements; how the construction will be phased; and how state and federal funding will fit into the infrastructure plan.

The mayor's detailed explanation of the negotiating process comes in the same month he formally introduced the public to the City's negotiating team of lawyers, financial consultants and architects with experience in many of the most ambitious redevelopment projects in recent Massachusetts's history.

The negotiations now underway will ultimately take the form of what is called a land disposition agreement, which will create the financial framework for the entire redevelopment program and will be subject to approval by the Quincy City Council. The mayor said he expects an agreement to be ready for the Council-and the public-this year.

"There are many people working incredibly hard on this project, and our partners with Street-Works are with us at the table working in good-faith," Koch said. "This is an elaborate process and the development agreement is only a first step. We will be discussing every detail of this with the community as we move forward."

The land disposition agreement, when completed, will trigger a series of permitting requirements for the project, including from the Planning Board and several state agencies, leading Koch to reiterate a point that the "most extensive project in City history will have the most extensive public process in City history."

Gov. Patrick Signs Military Tax Relief Bill At City Hall Ceremony

Home Rule Petition Authored By Coughlin

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Governor Deval Patrick was expected to join local legislators in Quincy Wednesday to sign the city's home rule petition offering tax breaks to the military serving in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"The governor believes this new law complements state programs that support our citizen soldiers and eases the financial burden their service places on their families," Heather Johnson, Patrick's spokeswoman told The Sun Tuesday.

"He wholeheartedly supports this type of innovative financial relief for our soldiers and hopes other cities follow suit and advance similar initiatives," said Johnson of the Home Rule Petition authored by City Council President Kevin Coughlin and passed by City Council in 2008.

Senator Michael Morrissey was the lead sponsor on Beacon Hill with support from Reps. Bruce Ayers, Stephen Tobin and Ron Mariano.

Gov. DEVAL PATRICK

KEVIN COUGHLIN

The legislation permits the city to grant real estate tax abatements to qualifying members of the Massachusetts National Guard and reservists for the periods they are on active duty outside the United States.

The abatements may be retroactive to fiscal year 2002 and the City may continue the program through 2010 with an option to extend it beyond that date.

Coughlin said he is pleased the governor is coming to Quincy for the ceremonial signing.

"It's a personal statement

(by the governor) in support of our citizen soldiers who sacrifice so much and whose families are impacted so much," said Coughlin.

Coughlin said he's pleased the initiative begun in Braintree is spreading statewide and he hopes it will catch on on a national scale.

This is an especially important time in Massachusetts, according to Coughlin who said the largest call-up of National Guard troops - 3,700 - is imminent.

Coughlin begins each City Council meeting with remembrances for the country's military.

City Seeks $160,000

In Election Reimbursements

State officials pledged to pay the bills for the two special elections held in December and January, but City Clerk Joseph Shea said Monday the city hasn't seen a dime.

Shea said the costs for the senate primary in November and the election in January totaled $161,000 and he's already sent two bills to state officials.

"That's the second cost sheet," said Shea of this week's report to the state auditor's office.

Shea said he paid the bulk of the election costs through a special appropriation authorized by City Council in the fall. The state was expected to reimburse that appropriation after the elections.

On Feb. 16, City Council approved a $3,500 transfer from the Elections Dept. to cover the cost of custodians for the Jan. 19 election.

The bills cover two special elections called to fill Senator Edward Kennedy's seat in Congress.

After the elections were announced, city and town officials sought assurance that the state would pick up the $5.5 million tab for elections.

At the time, Secretary of State William Galvin was quoted as saying, "If we don't appropriate the money, he won't print the ballots."

The ballots were printed. The elections were held.

Shea said city and town officials are still waiting.

RISKING YOUR NECK

One of the more popular trends in women's jewelry that shows no signs of abating is the wearing of dramatic necklaces. As a matter of fact, if anything, the look is getting even hotter as these ornately designed pieces exhibit even richer colors. "Statement necklaces" also feature ever-larger gemstones in rich blue, purple, ruby, and forest green. Styles range from warrior princess to innovative blends of ethnic cultures. In fact, the most desirable looks feature bold mixes of seemingly contradictory styles that coalesce into a harmonious whole. To show these necklace blends to maximum effect, it is best to wear a white dress shirt open at the collar, with a wide belt at the waist. Treat yourself or someone special with an eye-catching creation from our showroom. From statement necklaces to gold earrings to sparkling diamonds, our primary concern is to provide our customers with the highest quality jewelry whatever their style preferences. Professionalism, knowledge, and craftsmanship are our trademarks, and we pledge to further our tradition of honesty, trust, and integrity well into the future. To add to your own jewelry wardrobe or to find a special gift for someone else, you are always welcome here at 1402 Hancock Street, Quincy Center. PH: 617-773-3636.

City Hall Using High-Tech Methods To Reaches Residents

Messages, Complaints, Data At Quincy.MA.Gov Website

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Instant messages from City Hall now alert 700 residents to snow emergencies, street closures, construction projects and any major issue affecting safety, transportation, or health, according to Chuck Phelan, the city's Director of Information Technology (IT) who said all residents are invited to sign up for the messages via their computers.

And it's a two-way exchange system on the web, according to Phelan who said residents can also pay their taxes, excise or water bills onsite, or file complaints and describe local problems through the Constituent Service form.

Whether the problem is potholes or vandalism, the city now has a tracking system, according to Phelan who said the complaint form has been made user friendly.

In addition, old complaints do not just go away, according to Phelan who said, "The items have to be closed off through the mayor's office."

Currently, the city's site lists all local board meetings and, in many cases, proposed agendas, but in the future, minutes of the meetings will be posted, according to Phelan who spoke at last week's City Council meeting.

Local events are, also, listed but event sponsors must be either a government or school project or a non-profit group.

"It has to be a Quincy event," said Phelan who said the department welcomes listings from non-profit agencies or groups.

Phelan outlined recent advances to the city's technology system which were undertaken last year.

Initially, Phelan said he worked with a team of volunteers representing nearly every department. The first step was to change the name to the user-friendly "Quincy.MA.Gov." access and the second was surveying potential users.

The most popular destination on the website is the Assessors' View which allows anyone, anywhere, to determine the assessed value of every property in the city, according to Phelan.

"People didn't want to see that go," said Phelan, noting that the assessors' listing is prominently displayed with a symbol on the first page of the website.

Payments of most municipal bills may be made online either through an electronic check or payment by credit card. There are no fees for check payment but credit card payments are charged on a sliding scale from $1 and up, according to Phelan.

Phelan said he invited five vendors to submit proposals and narrowed that down to one, Unibank, as the others charged for check payments.

Unibank serves currently 200 cities and town in the state, according to Phelan.

The city's site has also incorporated web accessibility options, according to Phelan.

Koch, Council OK Texting Ban Petition, Heads To Beacon Hill

City Council last week approved a Home Rule Petition which, if cleared by the legislature and the mayor, would ban texting while driving in the City of Quincy and buttress that ban with fines starting at $100 an incident and increasing to $300.

Mayor Thomas Koch said Tuesday that he will sign the ordinance and forward it to state legislators.

Councillors debated the effectiveness of such bans by citing statistics and current laws but no speaker offered more powerful testimony than Lois Murphy of Houghs Neck, the only resident to speak at the public hearing on the issue.

"My son was killed 22 years ago by a distracted driver," said Murphy, adding that the reckless driver "left a wife injured and two children without a father."

Murphy's son Kevin, a graduate of University of Massachusetts, served in the Navy and was an police officer with the MDC, when he died in 1987.

"It's the most important thing you can do for the city," said Murphy who recounted her own recent experience.

Murphy described her terror when she was in a car while the texting driver held her phone between her legs. "They must think they're so important."

While all nine councillors supported safer driving, several questioned whether the local ban was the proper route or a symbolic act.

"It's been equated to driving under the influence," said City Council President Kevin Coughlin, Ward 3, who authored the petition.

Coughlin provided a video and statistics, indicating that 75% of all automobile accidents are preceded by some distraction and that texting while driving "quadruples the risk."

"I have twice been a victim and broadsided (by drivers) utilizing text messaging," said Coughlin who noted that Boston and Lowell have already enacted texting bans and other cities are evaluating bans.

Coughlin acknowledged that the state legislature is considering a blanket ban for the state. However, that legislation has already been detoured by an amendment focusing on elderly drivers.

"That has been something of a third rail up on Beacon Hill," Coughlin said of the elder driver initiatives. "There have been enough complexities with this issue."

Enforcement

"The biggest (problem) is enforcement," said Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci,

School Committeewoman Emily Lebo - A Life-long Learner

She received her first degree more than 30 years ago. Today, Emily Lebo remains a life-long learner.

Lebo, a first-term School Committeewoman, earned nursing degrees in 1976, 1987 and 2001 and is still taking course work. She's completed two graduate courses in education in the past two years.

Lebo, age 59, of 354 Highland Ave., worked as a critical care nurse at Boston City Hospital from 1980 to 1999. She was also a teacher and department chair at Quincy High School from 1987 to 1999. That year, she was named director of Career and Technical Education for the Quincy Public Schools, a position she held until 2007. Since then, she has worked as the director of Career and Technical Education for Boston Public Schools.

"Teaching in a vocational program was the best of both worlds for me," Lebo said. "I was able to continue practicing nursing while introducing young people to careers and opportunities in the health care industry."

"Becoming an administrator allowed me to support teachers who do this work everyday. It allowed me to work with others to find solutions to problems and challenges facing classrooms and schools."

We recently asked Lebo a series of questions covering a myriad of topics. Her profile is the fourth and final one of new city officials elected last fall.

Name: Emily Lebo

Education: Associates Degree in Nursing, Laboure College (1976); Bachelor's Degree in Nursing, Northeastern University (1987); Completion of Teacher Credentialing Coursework, UMass Boston, (1990); Master's Degree in Nursing Administration, Northeastern University (2001).

Family: My husband Stewart and I have three sons. Our oldest Christopher and his wife Jennifer (Kuhlmeier) live in Milton with their son Oliver; our middle son, Bill and his wife Laura (Donahue) live in Quincy with their three sons, Tommy, Henry, and Nathaniel. Tommy our oldest grandchild attends the Snug Harbor Preschool and our youngest son, Dr. Matthew Lebo, and his wife Meredith (Rugg) live in South Boston.

Why did you seek a seat on the Quincy School Committee?

I worked in the Quincy Public Schools for more than twenty years and when I left Quincy to work in Boston, I really missed the district and the involvement that I had with my community. I knew that I had the unique qualifications of really knowing the Quincy Public Schools from the inside and also knowing what is going on at the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education and their requirements and priorities. I felt that my involvement and background would position me to be helpful on the School Committee and I am very grateful to the voters for giving me their vote of confidence.

What is the most important issue facing the school committee at this time?

Certainly, it is the budget. The economy is not turning around as quickly as we had hoped. The word from the federal and state level is that no one wants to cut education. But even level funding will leave a major burden on city finances. The city still has to deal with negotiated raises and rising fixed costs. Quincy does not have a school budget that includes much more than staffing and fixed costs; it will be hard to find cuts that do not affect the classrooms.

What other issues are your priorities as an elected official?

My expertise is in the area of Career and Technical Education (CTE). Quincy has a long tradition of producing incredible citizens and workers from the CTE programs. Students in these programs, have the added benefit of being prepared for both the workforce and for post-secondary education. I know that our Plumbing Program had a waiting list for as long as I was in involved in the schools. It also had a reputation of being one of the best programs around. Alumni of the program are found all over the South Shore and have been supporting the program financially over the past several years through a golf tournament. Recently, however, one of the plumbing instructors was let go and I was told this was because of low enrollment; this also was true, I believe, in other CTE programs.

I want to see if I can find out what factors are contributing to this change in enrollment, not only in these programs but at Quincy High School. Quincy High has a beautiful new building, new equipment and curriculum aligned with state frameworks. There are great teachers who have a history of building more honors and Advanced Placement classes from Grade 9 to 12. Students in the CTE Programs have the opportunity to enter the workforce in their chosen field whether it be Health Care, Education, Engineering, Construction and many other areas and at Quincy High, you can do that while preparing for college in your career pathway. Not having these programs full makes me wonder what messages we are sending to the community about these programs and Quincy High School.

What are your thoughts about the recent shooting of a North Quincy High School student outside the school?

Although this was an isolated incidence its impact is significant. Any student who witnessed it was affected and others, just knowing that it occurred where they spend their school days were impacted. I have heard from several parents who are concerned about their children in the wake of the shooting.

Quincy Public Schools and the Quincy Police have policies and practices in place which allow for quick response and that did and will help mitigate the impact of this incident. Having said that, there are always ways to improve the response. I know that the superintendent is reviewing this and I am sure the School Committee will be working with him on it. Residency and the placement of programs at certain locations are two issues that need review.

I do want to say that I was really pleased with the response of the Police and the Mayor's office and their work with the schools to get information to the community. Communication and transparency will go a long way in making everyone feel safer.

Do you think the city is doing enough to address parent concerns about safety in the schools?

Recently we heard a presentation from the Quincy Police Department at a School Committee Meeting which was quite impressive, not only on their work with safety in our schools but also their work with mentoring students. I firmly believe that both of these types of initiatives make our schools safer. I do think we need to be more aware of out of school time activities that take place in our buildings and insure that the safety plans address those as well. All plans need to be reviewed regularly to insure that they are addressing contemporary issues like cyber safety, that they are being implemented, and that they are responsive to the changing needs of our community.

What changes you would like to see implemented in an effort to make the schools and school grounds safer?

As I said we need to really look at out of school time activities and the safety plan and safety staffing that addresses those activities. Also we need to look at the location of alternative programs and whether or not students who have been excluded from our buildings should have access to those buildings after school.

What are your thoughts about plans to build a new Central Middle School at the site of the former Winfield House in Wollaston? And what would you like to see done with the current Central School site after a new school is built?

My oldest son was at Central when the roof collapsed and he spent a year at Broad Meadows. That was twenty years ago and the school was in deplorable shape then so I am really happy to see we have found a site and are moving forward with the planning process with the Massachusetts School Building Authority. There really are no perfect locations that would allow us a campus for this school. Placing it at the Winfield House site allows the school to access Merrymount Park and the fields around it.

The City and the School Department need to look at their needs and determine what works best, not only for Central but also the buildings that will be empty at the Quincy High site. We pay a lot of money to rent space for the Central Office staff and the site is impossible to access because of the parking. Our alternative programs may need new space. The cost of getting any of these sites in shape needs to be carefully reviewed and we also have to consider the fact that we should get some properties back on the tax roles to address the loss of revenue to the city at the Winfield House site.

What other school building needs would you say should be addressed and prioritized?

Sterling has been on the back burner too long, it should be our next priority. We also need to insure that the proper maintenance to all of our buildings is taking place. In times of budget concerns, this is frequently one of the first areas to be cut. As homeowners, we know what happens when regular maintenance and repairs are not done in a timely manner. Things cost a lot more if they are let go for periods of time. We should work with the city side to see how we can better address maintenance.

What is your philosophy about filling vacancies in administrative positions (superintendent, school principals) - that is, hire from within the system or expand the job search?

My philosophy is to always get the best person that you can. That may come from inside but not always. I worry about the culture that is created when all administrative appointments are from inside. Groupthink starts to happen and loyalty becomes very important, sometimes to the detriment of taking a hard look at practices or to being innovative. In the current fiscal environment the superintendent has created jobs that fit his central office staff instead of really being able to look at what he needs to move the schools forward. Changing the job descriptions to fit the people you have in place does not make me feel all that comfortable. If you looked at any other comparable district, I know that you would see more Curriculum and Instruction staffing than Quincy has.

Are there any changes to the school curriculum - at the elementary, middle school or high school level - that you think should be made?

I would like to see Algebra I at the eighth grade level for most students and to find a way to insure that all students complete this by the end of Grade 9. Supports and strategies need to be in place for this.

I also would like to look at the sequence of science course work at the high schools. Why we have students taking courses in Grade 9 that do not allow them early access to the state's high stakes testing is something I would like more information about. We have Grade 9 courses in Earth Science, Introduction to Science, and Introduction to Physical Science, none of which is a testable high school subject. Some students get to take Biology in Grade 9 and can complete the science testing then. It appears that students have to be tested to insure that they have competence in Earth Science and Physical Science before they can take Biology even though there is no Earth Science or Physical Science high school test.

Quincy has always taught Earth Science in Grade 9 and has some terrific Earth science teachers however very few Massachusetts high schools consider this part of their science sequence. This is one place where getting a strong math and science curriculum leader from outside the district could be beneficial.

What sets the Quincy Public School system apart from other districts in the area?

The diversity of our students, the strength of our staff, the city's rich history, our community partners, our city's commitment to our schools and to our families, our incredible array of academics, the commitment to the arts programs, and the Career and Technical Education Programs. You can get a great education in our schools.

What do you hope to accomplish over the course of your four-year term on the school committee?

I hope to be able to bring a trained eye to the discussions and to insure that we understand where we are great and start to look hard at what we can improve upon. Although MCAS scores alone do not make a district great, parents flock to great schools and what they see are those scores. In order to continue to provide the comprehensive education that we do, we need a strong parent base and good real estate values. We do not want to be meeting the state average on this testing; we want to be above that average for all groups of students in all subjects.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A late 1930's postcard published by Louis Cafe at the corner of Bay View Avenue and Sea Street in Houghs Neck. Parked in front the two-door coupes with rumble seats were a popular style of automobile in those days. In the message on the back of this postcard the owners boasted - "The Highest Quality Liquor and Wines - Sea Food our Specialty - Dine and Dance in a delightful Atmosphere." For many years Louis was one of the best known nightspots in Quincy. Its loyal customers came from miles around. The slow jazz music played and enjoyed here was legendary. This building dating from the early 20th century burned down in 1987. Today, it is rebuilt and is known as Louis Crossing Restaurant. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Appreciate Asian Community, Not Stereotype

In response to Glynn's letter on Feb. 18th (issue of The Quincy Sun) questioning why there was a low turnout of Asians at the community meeting:

I am an American-born Chinese who has lived in Quincy since 1985. I have chosen to actively involve and volunteer myself in local organizations, meetings and events. I am extremely fortunate that my choice to be active in my community is not faced with language, cultural, social or economic barriers. This is obviously not the case for many immigrants who have chosen to move to Quincy to plant their roots, build their families and start their businesses.

I would hope that as a community we are welcoming all who choose Quincy as their city and community. This would entail having the compassion and patience to see the barriers that Asian immigrants face in being acculturated into American society and community.

Comments and statements made in the letter show a lack of appreciation for the Asian community and the barriers they face in integrating into all aspects of the community. Glynn wrote "I guess unity is only if you directly benefit from something."

How will those who choose Quincy as their home ever feel unity if there are such stereotypes present?

In regards to the C-mart community meetings, realize that not all Asians who were at the C-mart hearing meetings were supportive of it. The attendance of Asian residents were high at the C-Mart meetings because there was plenty and proper notification given by both councillors and C-mart to the public in the meetings to be held. Letters in both English and Chinese were sent to constituents and timely coverage in the Chinese media was given prior to the meeting for the entire community to attend.

Perhaps if there were enough time and attention to conduct these matters in addition to having a Chinese interpreter at the Feb. 8th meeting, there might have been a higher Asian turnout. However, due to the urgency of the meeting, many folks did not know of it happening till that morning or after the fact.

And yes, the 22nd Annual QuincyAsian Lunar New Year Festival will be held Sunday, Feb. 28 at North Quincy High School.

Feel free to attend as this festival welcomes the entire community regardless of one's age, gender or ethnicity.

NQHS Seniors Draft Bill For School Vote Course

By FRANK McCAULEY

The American Political Institutions Class at North Quincy High School takes its lessons seriously!

Twelve seniors took a field trip to the State House recently and wound up drafting a bill to establish voter registration courses at high schools.

The students, with political science teacher Michael Hurley, were attending a session of Senator Arthur H. Tobin's Election Law Committee when the subject of registration arose. Student Charlie Santoro said the group took exception to a suggestion that the election's personnel conduct registration at the schools. They drew up a rough draft defining a two to five hour course dealing with how and where to register and means of obtaining absentee ballots.

'Dance, Dance, Dance' At Kennedy Center

The Quincy Council on Aging Elder Services located at the Kennedy Center is in full swing with yoga classes, an exercise program and line dancing and recently added dancing lessons to its repertoire.

Dance instructor, Christine McCarthy, has her major in dance. She formerly dance with Disney and is a certified Arthur Murray instructor.

Currently McCarthy is performing in the Boston production of "Rent."

She instructs the group on dance from the 40's, 50's, and 60's on Tuesdays at 10 a.m. at the Kennedy Center located on East Squantum Street.

All seniors are welcome to stop by the center and observe any program they may be interested in before signing up. For more information, call 617-376-1506.

Other activities at the senior center include a pool table, ping-pong, exercise equipment, games and cards, frequent entertainment and lunches, cafe and library and volleyball.

LET'S DANCE – Dance instructor Christine McCarthy (right) leads Jack Reynolds and Beth Orzechowski, both of Quincy, through some steps at the Kennedy Center. Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Rice Crusted Zucchini Pie

One of the family's favorites are vegetable quiches or pie and I usually make them crust less, but I found a recipe for a rice crust that was both different and simple to prepare.

Of course it's easy if you have leftover rice, but if you don't, it cooks up pretty easy.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

RICE CRUSTED ZUCCHINI

For the Crust

1 cup cooked rice

1 egg

1/4 cup grated cheese

Salt and pepper to taste

Cook the rice according to directions. Add the beaten egg and the cheese and mix until blended.

In a slightly greased pie plate, smooth rice on all sides as well as the center.

Bake in the oven for about 5 to 7 minutes.

Set aside while you make the filling, which can include anything from ground meats to vegetables.

FILLING

1 medium zucchini (shredded)

2 eggs

1/4 cup flour

1/2 cup milk

1/4 cup grated cheese (cheddar if preferred)

Tomato and onion slices for top (if desired)

Salt and pepper to taste

Shred the zucchini, (leave the skin on)

Mix all the ingredients together until well blended. Pour into the rice pie shell; top it with the tomato and onion slices.

Bake in a 350 degree oven for 30 - 35 minutes. Cut when cooled.

The leftovers if any, heat well in the microwave.

They Care About This City, Too

In response to the Glynn letter (printed in the Feb. 18th issue of The Quincy Sun):

I have been a resident of Quincy for 27 years, I am married with 2 children who were born and grew up in Quincy. My oldest child graduated from North Quincy High School in 2008.

My whole family has participated in various events in the community and my wife has volunteered for many projects and events at Sacred Heart School. My daughter has volunteered for the city constituent services department, and I have volunteered at countless community events and served on the Quincy Human Rights Commission and currently as the President of Quincy Asian Resources.

When you say, "I guess unity is only if you directly benefit from something" you generalize Asian community involvement as solely for "their" direct benefit. This is a racist stereotype!

It is well documented that children's education has always been a top priority for the members of the Asian community, including the safety of our children.

You should not say that because community members didn't attend the Feb. 8th meeting they do not care about the safety of their children. There are many reasons that the Asian community was poorly represented at the meeting.

The announcement was not made very far in advance and was not made in the Chinese media and unfortunately many members of our community (unlike their children) do not read English proficiently. Perhaps if information of these meetings was made more available to the members of the Asian community, attendance would improve.

Regarding the high attendance of the C-Mart meeting, just because C-Mart advertised the meeting to the Asian population earlier and more effectively does not mean everyone attending was in support of C-Mart. Many members of the Asian community voiced the same traffic concerns to public officials in their own way. We care about our city. It is our home!

End Drug Abuse Now Night Sunday

Drug and alcohol addiction does not prejudice. Kids and adults who come from good families are falling prey to drug and alcohol addiction much more than you realize. A state special panel recently concluded that we are in the midst of an 'epidemic' of OxyContin and heroin use. What we are learning is that no one is beyond addiction, the very young, the well to do; string families are all equally affected.

Anyone who thinks it can't happen in their neighborhood or in their family are fooling themselves.

Join the Houghs Neck Community Council and End Drug Abuse Now (EDAN) on Sunday, Feb. 28 from 5-7 p.m. at the Houghs Neck Congregational Church, 310 Manet Avenue for a night of testimonials from those who have been affected by this epidemic and information about drug and alcohol abuse. Come and listen, show your support, help us increase the awareness of the challenge that is facing our community.

If you want to share your story and help us put a face to the problem please let me know. We are going to share stories of mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, EMTs, ER nurses who are on the front lines facing this epidemic and who have been deeply affected by drug and alcohol abuse.

Please come and help us as we begin to understand how common and wide spread this problem is. Through awareness we feel we can beat the odds and make sure that our community is not going to be another statewide statistic.

This is a social problem, to ignore it means that we will pay the price. This is a case where "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," awareness costs the taxpayer little; the alternative of corrections, courts, police, treatment are very expensive.

So, if you think that since you are not the parent of a teen you should not join us, you are wrong, everyone in our community needs to work at this problem together.

For more information, contact me at 617-786-1637 or email me at blaroche@comcast.net. Hope to see you there!

Blight Not Part Of Mayor's Vision

Mayor Koch is not being well served, and in turn neither are the people of Quincy.

The City Council and the mayor adopted a Blight Ordinance to provide a tool to enforce building and health code violations and to levy fines against recalcitrant property owners. Blighted properties bring down property values, increase crime, and fire risks, but also promote a stigma on our business and residential community.

Unfortunately, the two lead enforcing authorities, entrusted by Mayor Koch, are not performing their tasks in an acceptable manner.

Both, Inspectional Services Director Jay Duca and Health Commissioner Andrew Scheele appeared before Councillor Gutro's

Ordinance Committee, on Monday, Feb. 8 (televised on QATV Ch. 10) to answer questions from the committee about chronic, habitual offenders of the Blight Ordinance.

After listening to their testimony it's clear that these appointed officials have little, or no understanding of the seriousness of this problem. They can't even agree as to what constitutes a Blighted Property, and incredibly have only enforced minimal sanctions or fines against property owners who are in violation of building and health codes.

Councillors Laforest, Palmucci, and Raymond all wondered aloud, "How many hundreds of thousands of dollars in fines should have been collected?" Mr. Duca complained, "There are so many violations across the city it's hard to get a handle on them all."

Here's an idea, start with the first one! Wouldn't it have been nice to have the funding for a security guard stationed at the NQHS gym door (recently)?

Mayor Koch needs to be informed of the inactions by his department heads. The city of Quincy can't afford to have Blighted Properties affecting neighborhoods, property values, and lost revenues.

In his inaugural address, the mayor spoke of his vision about the future of Quincy. He talked about the relationship between safe, clean neighborhoods and the economic revitalization of the business community. He needs to be aware that those plans are in jeopardy.

Chamber Of Commerce Co-Director Montclair-Wollaston Meeting Speaker

The Montclair/Wollaston Neighborhood Association will meet Thursday, March 4 at 7:30 p.m. at the Church of the Good Shepherd corner of Harvard and West Squantum Street.

Guest speaker will be Mark Carey, co-director of the newly founded Quincy Chamber of Commerce. He introduced the community to the new concept and explained how this organization will function and have a positive impact on Quincy, and create "one business voice" for the city's merchants.

The chamber was created last month when the Quincy 2000 Collaborative and the Discover Quincy, nonprofit organizations that promote the city and its business community, voted to merge. Dean Rizzo and Mark Carey, are co-directors of the new venture.

All meetings are open to the public.

Snow Removal Costs $1.5M Koch: Tide Mill Preservation Plans Moving Forward

By TOM HENSHAW
If you think this winter has been a particularly snowy season, think again. The Department of Public Works has spent less on snow removal than last year at this time and there is a good chance that the final total will be much less than last season's $4 million. This year's total just past the halfway point is $1.5 million.

"We are down from last year; we're at a slower pace," said DPW Commissioner Larry Prendeville, explaining that two large snow storms last winter plus a pilot program that paid a contractor by the inch instead of the hour have contributed to the difference.

Mayor Thomas Koch increased the snow removal line in the Fiscal 2010 budget from the usual $300,000 to $600,000 and directed that any shortfall be paid from the current budget. In the past, such debts were paid out of the following year's budget.

At the end of the fiscal year, said Prendeville, the extra funds will be taken from the surpluses in other departments and free cash.

"A lot of this year's storms came on weekends," said Prendeville. "There were no snow days for the schools, except that day when we expected snow and didn't get it. We worked with the police to enforce the curbside parking laws."

The pilot program involved 40% of the city's roads in Wards 1 and 2 and part of Wollaston and was handled by Riley Brothers of Stoughton, the winning bidder, paid by the inch instead of the hour. Riley Brothers have been paid $155,000 to date. "It worked very well," said Prendeville.

Other expenses thus far have included:

- Hired equipment - $350,000
- Sand - $25,000
- Salt - $500,000
- Fuel - $130,000
- Repairs to equipment - $150,000
- Overtime for city workers - $200,000

The city gets a head start on a possible snow storm by subscribing to a service provided by meteorologist Rob Gilman.

"He faxes us what a storm is expected to do two days before it may be due here," said Prendeville. "Then he faxes us every six hours. After the storm, he tells us how many inches we got. When we get it we pay Riley Brothers."

Mayor Thomas Koch says plans to preserve the historic Souther Tide Mill together with a first-of-its-kind community-rowing center on the banks of the Town River are moving forward and evolving as the administration prepares to update City Councillors on the project Monday night.

"We started working on this with three priorities for the site-historic preservation, community access and rowing, and lobster fishing. We are making progress on all of those fronts, and we are very much looking forward to sharing that progress with the Council," Koch said.

The project's full vision aims to completely transform the overgrown, underused Southern Artery site that is a regular trouble spot for Quincy Police into a new waterfront public space that protects the history of the Tide Mill and provides residents with rowing, kayak and canoe access to the Town River and ultimately to a restored Broad Meadows Marsh, Koch said.

A public-private partnership with Baintree's Thayer Academy, which calls for the school to clean up the site and construct new boat access in return for access to the site for its rowing teams during two months in the fall and two months in the spring, is now moving through the final permitting stages with the state's Department of Environmental Protection.

The project, paid for by more than $100,000 in private donations, also calls for Thayer Academy to work with the Recreation Department and city schools to help start rowing programs locally. The plan has won the approval from the City's Park and Recreation Board, where it was first aired publicly in 2008, and is navigating through the state's Chapter 91 waterways permitting process.

"The plan continues to evolve, we're working closely with all agencies involved, and we are committed to achieving all three of our goals," Koch said. "This is a textbook public-private partnership. We will have a new park and new opportunities for our kids, and Thayer will have the access to the water it wants for its own program. All at no cost to our residents."

The park plans for the site dovetail with both the efforts to preserve the historic Souther Tide Mill and improve space set aside for local lobstermen at the site. Using Community Preservation Act funding, the city expects in coming days to solicit public bids for the beginning stages of preservation work at the Tide Mill, which first needs to be shored up.

"The immediate goal is to stabilize the building, and we will go from there working together with all the stakeholders in preserving the mill's history," Koch said. "All three of our goals will fit together to create a one-of-a-kind space that I think will truly become a jewel for the community."

Blue Hills Reservation Meeting Topic

Ward 4 Councillor Brian Palmucci will host a community meeting Thursday, March 4 at 7 p.m. in the second floor conference room at Quincy City Hall.

The meeting will be held with the Friends of Blue Hills to discuss current issues facing the Blue Hills Reservation, as well as on-going programming.

With 7,000 acres of trails, woods, and wildlife located nearby, the Blue Hills Reservation is enjoyed year-round by tens of thousands of visitors. Friends of the Blue Hills has fought successfully since 1976 to preserve and protect the Reservation, recognizing that we all share responsibility for caring for this precious and irreplaceable resource.

The Blue Hills Reservation makes up approximately 23% of the total land area of the City of Quincy, and 57% of the land area of Ward 4.

It has come under threat by recent development plans such as the Lantana land swap and the proposed Milton cell tower.

"The Blue Hills are one of Quincy's most important natural treasures," Palmucci said. "Protecting it is critical to maintaining the quality of life for residents of Quincy."

For more information, call Palmucci at (617) 834-3945.

Mayor Planning 'Difficult' Budget

number of fixed costs the city could not adjust.

Last year, the city saved $10 million thanks to changes in employee health insurance and saved an additional $1.7 million thanks to unions who agreed to defer contracted raises.

Those savings, in addition to savings from the City's new regional trash collection contract and other cuts, helped prevent widespread layoffs in any department and protected core services in major departments such as class size in city schools, neighborhood police patrols, and all fire department engine and ladder companies, Koch said.

The budget left property taxes on the average single-family home in Quincy unchanged, officials said, although some homes saw taxes change a degree in both directions because of fluctuations in property values.

This year, the city faces more than $6 million in contracted raises for employees, the likelihood of additional state aid cuts, and a likely increase in health care costs as the new program-the state-run Group Insurance Commission-begins its second year. While rates will rise, the increase is based on a baseline that is $10 million lower than it would have been had city employees and retirees not agreed to join the GIC, Koch said.

"We were creative, made major spending cuts and worked together to find savings to make this year's budget work. And the work was done with a clear recognition of the challenges every one of our families is facing in this economy," Koch said. "It's going to take that, and much, much more this year."

The mayor offered few specific details on what shape city's spending may take at this point, saying he is now meeting daily with Municipal Finance Director Nicholas Puleo to review numbers. Koch this week also met with leaders of the city's employees to discuss the City's financial situation and to answer questions.

an assistant district attorney in Plymouth County, who said a state law prohibiting "Driving While Distracted" is already on the books and would address the problem if it were enforced.

Palmucci said he has prosecuted several offenders, but provided statistics that indicate such laws are basically ineffective. "It's simply not enforceable. We're trying to legislate personal responsibility."

"It's just absolutely alarming we're putting on the books another ordinance that is unenforceable," said

Councillor John Keenan who cast the only vote against the proposal and suggested the council wait for legislative action.

Councillor Joseph Finn, also, suggested the council wait until legislators act as did Councillor Michael McFarland who preferred a strongly worded resolve directed at state legislators.

However, McFarland warned, "You can not legislate common sense."

The Home Rule Petition passed 8-1, not only as proposed city law, but as a strong message to state legislators to act on a ban on texting while driving.

"Oftentimes, it takes a city to set off a ripple. That ripple becomes a wave," Ward 4 Councillor Doug Gutro cited the effect of local smoking bans in speeding statewide legislation. "This is an opportunity to get our voice heard."

And there are many voices in favor, according to Ward 1 Councillor Margaret Laforest who described 55 e-mails to her on the issue. Of those contacts, 45 or 90% supported a city ban on texting while driving.

Five Firefighters Promoted

Mayor Thomas Koch has promoted five firefighters in the officer ranks in an effort to fill vacancies and keep all eight of the city's firehouses functioning.

Promoted from firefighter to lieutenant were Shawn Darcy, Dan Duncan and Michael Palaza.

Lt. Timothy Burchill was promoted to captain.

Capt. Edward Fenby was promoted to deputy chief.

All of the promotions were based on the highest scores on the most recent Civil Service exam, said Fire Chief Joseph Barron.

A Great Value, Right Around the Corner Willard Veterinary Clinic, Inc.

After practicing in Quincy for 22 years, Dr. Jack Blake broke out on his own and opened Willard Veterinary Clinic in 1985 in an old New England colonial home at 126 Willard Street. Two years later, Dr. Meg Connelly who grew up in Milton, joined her mentor and purchased the practice in 1997. While most of the staff are from the Quincy area the practice has become a part of the community earning the reputation, "Where everyone knows your name."

In 2007 Willard Veterinary Clinic expanded into a newly renovated space at 176 Willard St. across from Home Depot, where each pet is treated like it was their own family's pet. Following the guidelines from the American Animal Hospital Association, each patient receives an individualized Health Risk Assessment, from which a tailored Health Care Plan is developed. Because their patients can't speak for themselves, Willard Veterinary Clinic takes only 3 patients per hour, allowing the veterinarians to perform a thorough physical examination while obtaining a complete history. This helps to provide a systematic rather than shotgun approach to diagnostic tests, saving owners money in the long run.

Drs. Meg Connelly and Sarah Lentini each have over 25 years experience, with a variety of interests including internal medicine, ophthalmology, pediatrics, geriatrics and dentistry. Dr. Jamie McVicker especially enjoys dermatology and brings 5 years experience as well as the most recent breakthroughs in veterinary medicine. The Clinic maintains an excellent rapport with local specialists if required for referral.

Willard Veterinary Clinic continues to implement better and safer medications and vaccines, not the cheapest. The practice uses advanced monitoring equipment created for anesthesia, pain management and recovery. For today's dental procedures, Willard Veterinary Clinic takes pre and post op photographs; full mouth radiographs and give an accurate picture of the programs available to its target audience within the Quincy district.

Group Plans To Reapply For Hanlin Charter School

Dean Chin, Founding Group Leader, said the Group was encouraged by the Commissioner to consider reapplying during next year's application cycle. As of Tuesday, the Founding Group does plan to do so, Chin said.

"Although we were initially disappointed that the school did not receive a charter, the Founding Group took the entire process as a huge learning opportunity. Going into the process, we understood that many charters were not granted the first time around," Chin said.

"We realized that this was going to be a multiyear process since our multicultural classical approach is truly innovative and unique in the world history of education."

"Excited, we are eagerly looking forward to this year's cycle. We want all of the families and supporters in Quincy to know that we are more determined than ever in bringing about this amazing school that will certainly meet the children's needs and dreams."

Commenting on the Department's analysis, Chin said, "We do have concerns regarding some noticeable discrepancies of what was written in the Final Application and what was answered in the interview in regards to the strengths and weaknesses of our application, particularly with the Education Philosophy, Instruction, Curriculum and Budget sections."

"We intend to meet with the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education for clarification."

The denial comes after months of coordinated efforts by City leaders, including Mayor Koch, the School Committee, the City Council and the City's state legislative delegation to convince the Department of Education that the school should not receive a charter.

Officials made the case on a broad number of issues, but most revolved around the anticipated $800,000 in state education funding that would be shifted from Quincy Schools to the new charter school and its alleged focus on specifically targeting Asian American students.

In a voluminous collection of written objections, the Quincy School Department described in detail the success rate of Asian American students and how effective its programs have been for students who need help learning English.

For its part, the Koch administration wrote a strongly worded letter to Chester stating that providing the School a charter would be a clear violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution's 14th Amendment.

"The School Committee, Superintendent DeCristofaro and his leadership team, the City Council, our state delegation and the entire community deserve great credit for making fact-based arguments that this proposal would have placed an unfair burden on the educational resources we are all working so hard to protect during this economic crisis," Koch said.

450-Foot Wind Turbine Next 'Border Battle?'

the course recently named "New England Course of the Year" and labeled the Pebble Beach of the East Coast.

The 27-hole golf course lies on land leased to Quarry Hills Associates by Quincy and Milton. Both receive payments from the golf course, but under different formulas. Milton collects real estate tax and Quincy's payment is based on the course's income.

Milton collected $30,000 in real estate taxes last year, according to town Administrator Kevin Mearns.

Quincy collected $267,741 in payments based on golf course income, according to city records. The Quincy payments are currently under review.

50-Story Building Turbine Height

A Granite Links advertisement indicates that the proposed turbine will be three times taller than the turbine on the Southeast Expressway.

"It's somewhere between the height of the old and the new John Hancock building," said O'Connell who is hoping for an opportunity to address Milton Town Meeting next week and to explain the potential for costly shortfalls ahead.

O'Connell said Milton has not shared its calculations on the wind turbine finances with his team but he believes the town will not benefit from the turbine.

"I believe the turbine may not have the economic feasibility that selectmen and Town Meeting expect," said O'Connell.

Milton is anticipating some $800,000 a year in income from the wind project but O'Connell expects the proceeds will actually be half that and closer to $400,000, not nearly enough to pay off the town's bond debts, maintenance and construction costs.

O'Connell said his group supports green energy through its trash to energy plant, its methane program, and their experts are knowledgeable about the financial traps and gains in the energy field.

Milton Town Meeting

Milton Town Meeting members will consider the issue next Monday or Tuesday as the last article of their current Special Town Meeting.

Selectmen Chairman John Shields said the turbine meets the town's zoning bylaws and he expects the board will consider construction bids at their Monday meeting and Town Meeting will approve the project.

Shields said that Milton has already agreed to shut down the turbine when the flicker from the turbine disrupts golfers, "We will turn it off."

As for noise, Shields said, "There is no scientific study that noise is a factor."

Shields said that he and the other selectmen have been working on the project for more than a year before seeking the $6.2 million bond authorization from Town Meeting.

At this time, Shields said there are state, federal and private grants available for such projects and Milton would like to take advantage of them. The Town has already received a $399,000 grant.

Such grants won't balance the effect of the wind turbine which Granite Links officials believe "will literally and figuratively cast a shadow on the enjoyment of thousands of golfers, dining patrons, hikers and horseback riders."

This isn't the first time Quincy and Milton faced off over a major border dispute.

Some 25 years ago, the Town of Milton challenged Quincy in court over the cell tower built in Quincy but abutting Milton's Cunningham Park.

Milton lost and the cell tower remains.

Now, it looks like pay-back time for the Town of Milton.

Insurance STRATEGIES

by Jim Sullivan

ARE YOU PAYING TOO MUCH FOR AUTO INSURANCE?

At JAMES J. SULLIVAN INSURANCE AGENCY, we are licensed professionals with strong customer and community ties. Serving your insurance needs is our most important concern. Whether you need a new insurance policy for your home, car, or business, please call us at 617-328-8600 to schedule a consultation. As an independent insurance agency, we carefully selected several insurance carriers and can therefore offer you the best coverage at the most competitive price. Our office is located at 151 Hancock Street.

According to a survey by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, more than a third of homeowners mistakenly believe that their basic homeowners insurance covers flooding and earthquakes. If you are unsure as to what exactly your homeowners insurance covers, schedule an appointment to review your policy with your agent. Among other things, it is important that you know whether your home is insured for cash value or replacement cost. Because cash value factors in depreciation and could amount to less than you might expect, it is recommended that you insure your home for 80 percent of its replacement value. This percentage takes into account that you will not have to insure the land your house sits on.

NOTE: If you make any home improvements that cost more than $5,000 or make major purchases, contact your agent about updating your policy or getting a special "rider" on valuable items.

We Did It!

It's good to be a small part of an effort larger than each individual, while it's even better once that effort is a success. I'm referring to the Quincy Fire Department's pursuit of a $10,000 grant; I am writing to thank each individual who participated in our successful pursuit of that grant.

To refresh your memory, Liberty Mutual offered fire departments throughout the United States a grant if they could muster enough participation in a fire safety quiz. We felt that the participation in the quiz alone would raise fire safety awareness for those taking it and thus be beneficial, while the grant was awarded to the city or town that attained the greatest number completing the quiz; and we did it!

The grant will be awarded shortly and monies applied to our essential equipment needs. Considering the financial constraints each and every city and town is now facing, the grant money is welcomed. Considering the widespread enthusiasm we received by those of you who participated in the quiz, it's much appreciated.

Many within the department, and outside as well, made this endeavor their own by impressing upon individuals what this effort meant for the city. It was the City of Quincy in action while the fruits of that commitment and the intangible efforts now speak volumes. Once the word was out, the torch was passed and the job was seen to completion.

Here are two examples:

Squantum Community Youth Choir Auditions For Cinderella Sunday

The Squantum Community Youth Choir announces auditions for its sixth annual performance - Rodgers and Hammerstein's Cinderella - will be held Sunday, Feb. 28 from 2 to 4 p.m. at the First Church of Squantum, 164

I know of one past Quincy resident in Guam who took the quiz, while another, who now resides in Kansas did as well. One city within this great nation once again stands out and is recognized. While I believe it says just as much about our spirit, as our ability to come together and accomplish what must be done. Congratulations!

And finally, I'm writing to thank the staff of The Quincy Sun and the members of our own QATV, Mark Crosby specifically, for being such a valued resource for conveying all that is Quincy. Both mediums were quite instrumental in this specific effort, and enthusiastic about being a part of it as well.

Thank you all again!

4th Annual Fight For A Cure At Florian Hall March 13

A group of family and friends will host the fourth annual Fight for a Cure fundraiser at Florian Hall, Dorchester, Saturday, March 13.

The event was inspired by Cliff Street resident Erin Fitzpatrick and her battle against breast cancer at the age of 33. Erin was a wife, mother to two children aged 6 and 9, and an ER nurse at South Shore Hospital when she discovered a lump in her breast through a self breast exam. While the lump itself was not cancerous, tests revealed a small dumb-bell shaped stage II invasive ductal carcinoma adjacent to the lump.

Because her age was well below the norm of the average age of a person diagnosed with breast cancer, ERIN FITZPATRICK with her niece, Kendall.

Erin chose a double mastectomy with reconstruction and chemotherapy to ensure a positive prognosis. The majority of women diagnosed with breast cancer are over 50.

Erin, her family and friends conceived the idea of a fundraiser to help defray costs associated with participating in the Avon Walk for Breast Cancer and the Susan G Komen Race for the Cure®. Last year's proceeds went to The Sag-off Breast Centre/ Faulkner Hospital's purchase of a Biopics Specimen imager for the Operating Room. This machine provides immediate verification of excised breast tissue margins while minimizing risk to the patient. It enables surgeons to see their tissue samples immediately while still in the OR and it significantly reduces the amount of time a patient is under anesthesia.

The event will feature raffles and a silent auction. There will be a cash bar and music provided by DJ Colm.

To purchase tickets or submit an item for auction, e-mail Erin at the address: erinfitz@comcast.net

'Garbage Dreams' Movie Screening, Discussion At Atlantic Middle School

MassRecycle and the Quincy Environmental Network will sponsor a screening of Garbage Dreams, an award-winning documentary, Wednesday, March 3 at Atlantic Middle School, 86 Hollis Ave., Quincy.

Garbage Dreams follows three teenage boys born into the trash trade who grow up in the world's largest garbage village on the outskirts of Cairo, Egypt. The village is home to 60,000 Zaballeen, Arabic for "garbage people."

Far ahead of any modern "green" initiatives, the Zaballeen survive by recycling 80 percent of the trash they collect. When their community is suddenly faced with the globalization of its trade, each of the boys is forced to make a choice that will impact his future and the survival of his community. The film will be followed by brief panel discussions about ways to increase recycling locally and statewide.

Director/Producer Mia Iskander says the purpose of this film is "to encourage people to re-examine the true value of what they throw away each day and the real cost of throwing out the expertise of Zaballeen." She also hopes people will "see a little bit of themselves in the three teenagers of the film."

Former U.S. Vice President Al Gore presented the 2009 REEL Current Award to the documentary Garbage Dreams at the Nashville Film Festival. Gore presents the award annually to a film that gives outstanding insight into a contemporary global issue.

Dmitry Nikolayev, President of MassRecycle, had this to say about the film, "Garbage Dreams is an amazingly touching human story and highlights how much more we can recycle in our own communities. We hope that the story of the Zaballeen, who recycle 80 percent of the garbage they collect, will inspire Massachusetts residents to support additional recycling initiatives."

"After all, our own recycling rate is around 33 percent."

The events is free and open to the public, but an RSVP is requested at www.massrecycle.org/dreams.

FOOT NOTES

by Joel Chariton, D.P.M.
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Surgery
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Orthopedics

PROBLEMS OF THE SENIOR FOOT

For seniors, disease or decreased activity may cause progressive loss of muscle mass, and atrophy of tissue. Manifestations of this include a wide number of foot disorders and deformities. When these and other conditions cause foot pain, a senior's mobility and ambulatory status may be further limited, and foot problems may worsen. Common foot disorders in the elderly are the result of severe or repeated trauma, inflammation, strain, rheumatoid arthritis, and osteoporosis. The management of all deformities should be directed toward relief of pain and improvement of the ability to walk. For most seniors, non-operative treatments are effective in controlling the pain. Surgical revision remains an option when these measures are not successful. Feet of all ages deserve to be pain-free. We recommend a professional evaluation if you think your feet are either causing pain and discomfort or if they are trying to tell you there is a problem somewhere else in your body. Either way, a podiatrist's diagnosis can be instrumental in the relief of symptoms and eventual recovery. For foot care for all members of your family, from juniors to seniors, call us at 781-986-3668 for an appointment at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. I am affiliated with the Brockton and Good Samaritan Hospitals.

Animal Shelter Seeks $10,000 Grant

The Quincy Animal Shelter is hoping to secure a $10,000 grant that would go a long way in making improvements to the shelter.

The shelter is a nonprofit entity that is 100 percent volunteer run.

The shelter is launching a campaign to win the $10,000 grant. The competition is for eligible Petfinder.com member shelter and rescue groups. The grand prize is awarded to the shelter with the most votes.

Eighty-five smaller awards will be given to shelters with top votes, for a grand total $100,000 in grants for animal welfare organizations.

The Quincy Animal Shelter is also eligible to receive a one-time weekly prize and a state-specific grant. There are three honorable mention grants for $3,000 and two $3,000 grants for state winners.

"We would stand to get a monetary award," said Lynda Southerland, a member of the shelter's board of directors.

The Quincy Animal Shelter is seeking the community's support in the competition with a simple, free vote at www.theanimalrescues.com.

ite.com. Click the sideways "Shelter Challenge" tab and search for the Quincy Animal Shelter. Votes can be done once a day, every day, through April 18.

If voters enroll in the free Daily Clicks Reminder Email, special Purple Paw Pins will be given for free (while supplies last). The shelter encourages voters to share the competition information with friends via Facebook, Twitter and other methods.

The shelter has no paid staff and relies completely on volunteers and the community for support.

Bethany Congregational Church Responds To Haiti's Tragedy

Like other area churches, the members and friends of Bethany Congregational Church responded to the catastrophic 7.0 magnitude earthquake that struck Haiti Jan. 12.

A special collection was taken immediately following the earthquake and donations were sent to the people of Haiti through the "United Church of Christ" and "Save the Children."

Bethany members and friends as well as various groups within Bethany Church are now collecting "Hygiene Kits" to be delivered to "Church World Service" for the continued care of the people of Haiti. These groups comprise women's groups, men's group, youth group, Bethany Church School and Cub Scout 42.

An estimated three million people were affected by the quake, including an estimated 217,000 to 230,000 dead; 300,000 injured and another one million homeless. "Thank you to all who participate, their plight is beyond anything we can imagine as we go to our comfortable homes," said the Rev. Williams C. Harding, Bethany pastor.

"May God watch over all the people of Haiti, those that are affected, those who are desperately trying to aid them in their country and to all the people in our great land who have the empathy to care and assist," added the Rev. Gary W. Smothers.

Fundraiser March 7 Benefits Animal Shelter

By JOE REARDON

The Quincy Animal Shelter is taking an aggressive effort in garnering funds to improve conditions for the animals with a March 7 luncheon at Siros at Marina Bay.

The luncheon is $50 per ticket and will be held from 1-4pm. The restaurant is located at 307 Victory Road, North Quincy.

The shelter's board of directors has isolated three main areas where improvements need to be made. An air exchange system is necessary for a long-term facility, which is more than 14 days.

The current system takes time to heat up in the winter months, and in the summer months doesn't blow cool air right away. "That needs to be updated or repaired," said Lynda Southerland, a member of the shelter's board of directors.

Sound baffling is needed as well. This would reduce the noise of the dogs' barking. Constant exposure to barking places stress on dogs and cats alike. The third necessity is an increase in cage size for the cats. Many of the shelter's cages are below standard for long term care of felines. The cats should be in a cage large enough for them to move around and get up on a shelf in the cage.

"We want to work with what we have to make the shelter more comfortable," said Southerland.

The Humane Society of the U.S. (HSUS) has a shelter review program that the board would like to take advantage of to ensure raised funds are put to the best possible use. The program involves reviewing the policies and procedures of shelters, their bylaws, volunteer handbook and training procedures and in-house operations.

The "efficiency study" evaluates 12 key components of the shelter and comes back with recommendations.

An on-site visit is needed to evaluate the setup and offer suggestions regarding how the shelter can best utilize the available space and what may be needed in improvements.

The owner of Siros, Kristie Henriksen, donated the large dining room in addition to the food for the event. All the proceeds from the fundraiser will go towards the maintenance fund. Tickets should be purchased prior to the event and can be ordered online at quincyanimalshelter.org. The room only allows seating for 100 people. Tickets can be purchased at the door at 1 p.m. For more information, got to the shelter's website or call the shelter at (617) 376-1349.

Cyril P. Morrisette Post Memorial Mass At St. Mary's Church

FR. DOMINIC MENNA was the celebrant at the Cyril P. Morrisette American Legion Post 81st annual Memorial Mass held Feb. 15 at St. Mary's Church, West Quincy. Leading the procession is server Ray Cattaneo.

THOMAS STANSBURY, past commander of the Morrisette American Legion Post and director of Quincy Veterans Services, reads the first reading at the Memorial Mass.

ROLL CALL OF recently deceased members of the Morrisette American Legion Post are read by Post Past Commanders Henry Bradley (left) and Lawrence Norton. The names of all deceased members - numbering more than 1,000 - were listed in a booklet prepared by Historian Guy Ferris and distributed at the Mass which included Gold Star Mothers and families of deceased veterans as honored guests.

MEMBERS OF THE Morrisette American Legion Post enter St. Mary's Church in West Quincy for its 81st annual Memorial Mass. The Mass was attended by invited guests including American Legion officials and staff, Mayor Thomas Koch, city, county, state and national officials as well as honored guests Gold Star Mothers and families of deceased veterans.

Gutro's 27-Mile Coastline Walk Educational, Recreational

Local Guides Lead Him On Eight Separate 2-4 Mile Walks From Milton To Former Shipyard

One of Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro's New Year's resolutions for 2009 can be crossed off his list.

It entailed walking all 27 miles of Quincy's coastline and he recently completed. It included eight separate 2 to 4 mile walks from Milton to the former Quincy shipyard. Each segment was led by a local guide with local knowledge of the area.

"I chose to do this to familiarize myself with Quincy's coastline in a manner that few before have attempted," said Gutro who is also vice chairman of the Quincy Beaches and Coastal Commission.

"My goal was both recreational and educational," Gutro added. "I sought to discover coastal and natural areas I hadn't visited, learn about historic land use patterns, identify public access points and recreational destinations, and familiarize myself with areas that draw people to our city."

Segments included: Neponset River; Squantum Point Park and Marina Bay; Squantum; Wollaston Beach; Merrymount to Nut Island; Nut Island to the Quincy Police Station; Germantown; and Quincy Police Station to the former Fore River shipyard.

He traversed from Milton to the Best Western Adams Inn, along the banks of the densely vegetated Neponset River, with his boys Brian and Scott guided by Quincy Environmental Network founder, Steve Perdios and his daughter Casey.

QEN spokeswoman Maura O'Gara led him and his boys along the lower Neponset River, Squantum Point Park, and around Marina Bay.

Longtime Squantum residents, Mike and Maureen Mazrimas took Doug around Squantum from the Causeway, along Squaw Rock, by Moon Island and back to Moswetuset Hummock.

Doug, a former chairman of the Wollaston Beach Task Force, his wife Sue, and their boys walked Wollaston Beach tracing their distance on the mile markers.

Former Mayor Frank McCauley imparted historical and political tidbits during Gutro's walks through three sections of marsh, beaches and coastline that included Merrymount, Adams Shore, Hough's Neck, and Germantown.

QEN President Steve Perdios led Doug down Route 3A behind the Souther Tide Mill, and along Quincy Points coastline and beaches to the historic Fore River Shipyard.

"I'm grateful to my friends who served as guides for their time, talent, and local knowledge," Gutro said.

"Their insights on history, nature, culture, politics, and land use decisions have reinforced my commitment to protect these places for those who live here and wish to visit."

Gutro pointed to Zero Harriett Ave as a property with acquiring along the Neponset River. He referenced the State Street Bank Development as one in which the City missed an opportunity to provide coastal access.

Gutro also expressed support for utilizing Marina Bay as the perfect place to establish boat transportation to the Harbor Island and amazement at the views afforded along Squaw Rock and Moon Island.

Wollaston Beach, he added, will be improved through interpretive signs next summer, but requires a long-term city-wide commitment to improving water quality.

Merrymount, Adams Shore and Germantown showcased desirable coastal views and marshes that benefit families of all income strata. The Tidemill remains one of the last truly historic coastal assets the will undoubtedly elicit council attention moving forward; and the family friendly beaches of Quincy Point are true neighborhood gems.

The Quincy Shipyard, while rich in history, is ripe for redevelopment and a comprehensive plan that harnesses its coastal amenities.

STEVE PERDIOS, president of the Quincy Environmental Network, along the banks of the Town River adjacent to Souther Tide Mill. Here Perdios points to the historic pier adjacent to both the Town River and Souther Tide Mill.

A Job Well Done

On Thursday, Feb. 11, at approximately 2:20 p.m., Officer Ed Bagley, working in communications, broadcast a BOLO (be on the look out) for a 2009 Toyota Corolla bearing a specific Massachusetts license plate, wanted in connection for an armed robbery.

The victim was in the lobby to report the incident. Officer Bagley further notified all units that the vehicle was rented locally. Officer Daniel Francis drove over to the rental office and learned the renter's name and that the vehicle was due to return two days later.

Although the renter used one address, Officer Francis, using his cruiser computer, determined the renter's address was in Germantown. He then requested officers go to the residence while he met with the victim in the station lobby.

The victim told the officer that he was at his car after leaving work on Ross Way when he was approached by two males who asked him if he was interested in purchasing tire rims. The victim stated one of the males showed him a picture of rims and offered them for $950. The victim agreed to the price and informed the males he would get the money and return.

He returned soon after with the money and found one of the males in a car adjacent to A.J. Wright, located at 126 Parking Way. The victim met with the male and then they went into A.J. Wright to find the other male. The three then exited the store. They decided to take separate cars, with the victim and one of the males together, to go to the suspect's home and get the rims.

The victim said they drove about a half mile away to a dead end street (later determined to be Packard's Lane), where the suspect in the victim's car pulled a firearm from his waist area and placed the muzzle onto the victim's right temple area. The suspect took the money from the victim, then fled from into the other car.

During the time of the interview, as officers were searching for the suspect vehicle, Officer Tom Pepdonovic spotted the suspect vehicle northbound of Quincy Shore Drive with two occupants. With the assistance of several additional police units, officers stopped the car on Billings Street.

Officers Steve DesRoche and John Grazioso, Sr. assisted in the felony stop and provided cover while Officer Pepdonovic handcuffed the driver/suspect #1 and then the passenger/suspect #2. After reading rights to both occupants separately, the passenger/suspect #2 said he met "some kid" in the A.J. Wright parking garage and the kid said he wanted to buy some guns. Suspect #2 told him he was in the National Guard and could get the guns, so the three drove to "a National Guard center somewhere in Quincy."

The suspect said they agreed on a deal to sell the kids four guns and a "vest" for $950. They met up with "the kid" later in the parking garage and he got in the kid's car with him while suspect #1 followed behind. The suspect said they agreed to make the deal somewhere in Boston's Chinatown. When they got to Chinatown, they "rolled" him but there was no gun involved.

When asked what he meant by "rolled," suspect #2 said he stole the kid's money – specifically confessing that he stole $950 from the victim. Officer Pepdonovic then questioned the driver/suspect #1, who said he went to A.J. Wright today in order to return a jacket. When he walked out of the store, he noticed his friend/suspect #2 was talking to a male in the parking garage area. He stated that suspect #2 told him to follow them into Chinatown, which he did.

While parked on a side street in Chinatown, he observed his friend get out of the car and get into his vehicle, then was instructed to "go." Suspect #1 denied any knowledge of a robbery.

K-9 Officer Dave Cooper and his partner Deco checked the suspect vehicle but there was no weapon in the car. Detectives Bill Monteith and Jason MacIsaac brought the victim to the suspect's location and confirmed they were the suspects.

At the station, it was learned that the passenger/suspect #2 had an outstanding warrant out of Dudley District Court for assault with a dangerous weapon and the driver suspect was charged with operating a motor vehicle without a license. During booking, $810 was recovered from the passenger suspect and $126 was recovered from the driver suspect.

While writing his report, the female who rented the car met with Officer Francis. She said that her boyfriend took her rental without permission and although she did not want to press charges, she wanted to get her car back. She was told the car was towed and could be picked up at the private garage after paying the fees.

In closing, Officer Francis told me it was unclear what the actual transaction was about, whether it was about rims, guns, vests, drugs or something else. Nice Work!

Registry Of Deeds Computer Seminar March 25

Register of Deeds William O'Donnell will host an informational seminar on computer assisted land records research at the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds in Dedham Thursday, March 25 from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

The seminar is intended for both real estate professionals and the public.

The program will include a brief presentation, written reference materials, and hands-on exercises.

There will be opportunities for both basic and advanced questions and answers.

Computer assisted land records research is available both at the Registry and on the Internet at www.norfolkdeeds.org.

"These services have proven valuable tools for our customers," O'Donnell said, "and we hope that this seminar will be helpful and informative."

There is no charge for the seminar, but anyone planning to attend is asked to register by calling 781-461-6104 or by email to agardner@norfolkdeeds.org.

Include name, address and a daytime phone number when registering.

O'Donnell also announced the expansion of the Internet accessible land records available at the Registry of Deeds.

The ongoing project has extended and made available all recorded land indices back to 1927.

"Recorded land records are referenced by a book and page number based on the traditional Common Law recording system. This project enhances our Internet accessible library and provides a valuable online researching tool," O'Donnell said.

"Both the practitioner and consumer will find this is a real benefit as indexing by name is the primary way to locate the appropriate book and page reference."

O'Donnell said the Registry is continuing with the next phase of the expansion that is expected to take the online indexing capacity back to 1911.

Major Home Repairs Tough on Seniors

Q: My front porch is in pretty bad shape, with holes in the floor boards and one of the corner posts looking like it's about to fall. The city has already been by once and warned me about it -- next time I'll get a fine. But I'm on a very limited income and cannot get around well anymore. How can I possibly get this fixed? -- Tony in White Plains, N.Y.

A: Major home repairs can put seniors in a really tough situation. In this case, your porch needs more than a new coat of paint. It's got a structural problem that could affect the entire house, and the broken boards are certainly a safety issue.

Your first task is to locate resources for senior citizens in your area -- any resource, to begin with. The city of White Plains has a Senior Center (located at 65 Mitchell Place, phone 422-1423 or visit <http://www.cityofwhiteplains.com>). While the center does not directly address home repair issues, it does concentrate on support services for seniors with mobility issues and financial concerns, and it doesn't hurt to have a sympathetic ear on this. If you received the city's warning in writing, check the paper for a contact number to the code enforcement office. If not, the government listings are usually listed in a "blue pages" section of your phone book. Contact the city and ask about getting help to fix the front porch. You may get a runaround at first, but be persistent and patient. You also should check with the office about how to appeal the warning or how to ask for more time to make the repair.

Put out the word that you need help with this, to neighbors, friends and family. Let the city know you need help to fix the issue. Now is the time to make noise and get help.

HOME TIP: Check with local senior or community centers about education or assistance programs regarding property maintenance and repair.

Send your home repair and maintenance questions to homeguru2000@hotmail.com, or write This Is a Hammer, c/o King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Remember, when in doubt as to whether you can safely or effectively complete a project, consult a professional contractor.

Quincy Pee Wees Bow In Finals

Kiwanis Youth Hockey Tournament 'Phenomenal'

By JOE REARDON

Goals came in bunches for the local youth squads that competed in last week's prestigious Kiwanis Tournament at the Quincy Youth Arena.

The annual winter vacation competition, which brought together some of the best young talent on the South Shore, and an Austrian Bantam club that wanted to stamp its mark on the arena ice, was loaded with strong performances.

The Pee Wee team squared off in the finals against a suffocating Weymouth club and came up on the short end of a 3-2 thriller. Sean Brennick and Michael Le struck for tallies in Sunday's showdown.

"The tournament went phenomenally," said QYA Director Michelle Stenberg. "The kids had a great time and the Austrians really added some flavor."

Le and Liam McCarthy had goals in the team's impressive 4-2 win over Braintree and teammate Brian O'Callahan drilled home a pair of goals. The team went on a scoring spree in its 9-1 win over Tri County. O'Callahan put home two goals again and Andrew Kelly, Kevin Mock, Troy Shepherd, John Cambell, Jarrold Grier, Michael Finn and Brandon Beale came up with goals in the lopsided victory.

Matt Fox provided the entire Squirts' offense with two goals in their 4-2 loss to Braintree. Fox also had the lone tally in a 5-1 loss at the hands of Duxbury, who beat Braintree in the finals, 2-1. Much like the PeeWee's offensive blitzkrieg against Tri County, the Squirts had their way with Billerica in a 6-1 win. Kevin McDonald led the way with a hat trick, and teammates Austin Currie, Martin McCormack and Sean Healy all registered solo tallies.

Sniper Matt Keohane had a huge tournament in the Mites division, pumping in four goals in a 10-3 shellacking of Weymouth, and two each in losses to Braintree and Barnstable. Dylan Connors put up a hat trick against Weymouth, while Ryan Lawton and Griffin each found the back of the net. Daniel O'Leary and Mike Adamson also provided solid offense with goals in the tournament. In the finals, Milton outlasted a tenacious Barnstable team, 2-1.

The Bantams put on a surge in the tournament to give the Austrian team a scare in their 5-3 loss. Aaron Clancy, Andrew Currie and Brendan Cox had goals. In their 7-1 loss to Braintree, Colin Donnelly lit the lamp for Quincy. Duxbury blanked Weymouth 2-0 to capture the team title.

A skills tournament, much like the NHL's during all-star weekend, was held for the first time and was a huge success. Griffin Batson picked up the medal in the Mites Fastest Skater competition while Braintree's Aidan Flynn and Cam Mooney took the Hardest Shot and Accuracy, respectively.

Quincy's Mike Finn had the most accurate shot in the PeeWee grouping while the Weymouth duo of Joe Demonico (Hardest Shot) and Connor Lewis (Fastest Skater) also earned medals.

Dana Canavan of Braintree dominated the competition in the Squirts division, taking away gold in all three skills. In the Bantams division, Austria's Nikolaus Zierer was untouchable in the Hardest Shot and Accuracy categories, and Weymouth's Mike Brennan blazed his way to the Fastest Skater title.

The Quincy players who competed in the tournament include:

Q/NQ Finished 21st At Girls DI Championships

Diver Taryn Urbanus Takes Third Place

Quincy/North Quincy's Taryn Urbanus, a sophomore diver, earned third place at the Girls Division I State Swimming and Diving Championships held Feb. 20 at the Blodgett Pool on the Harvard University campus.

Quincy/North Quincy High School (3-7 overall), as a team, finished 21st out of 39 schools competing.

Urbanus took third place after accumulating 404.8

points in the 11-dive competition. Urbanus had already won both the Central/South Sectional championships, amassing a then season-best 377.154 points in addition to the Patriot League competition where she was named to the all-league team.

Urbanus is being seriously considered for All-American High School Diving honors.

She is a member of the South Shore Diving Club under the tutelage of head coach Craig Dolloff and she has already qualified for the 2010 Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) Diving National Championships.

Junior co-captain Kendra Johnston finished in 24th place in the 200-yard individual medley. Her effort of 2:26.53 was just over one second shy of her school record-breaking effort of 2:25.63 established on Dec. 15.

Opened Tournament With 50-42 Win At Pembroke; Played Whitman-Hanson Last Night

Presidents Looking To Stage Major Upset

By SEAN BRENNAN

Next up: A date with the best team in the MIAA Division II South Sectional bracket, Whitman-Hanson High School.

That was the reward for the Quincy Presidents after knocking off Pembroke High School, 50-42, Monday night, in the play-in game (preliminary round), of the DII South Sectional basketball tournament.

The Presidents (11-10 overall) were scheduled to play Whitman-Hanson (18-2 overall) last night (Wednesday, 7 p.m. at W-HHS) in a first round matchup with the winner advancing to Friday night's quarterfinal game against the winner of the Hopkinton/Plymouth North first round contest.

Quincy earned the right to play David to Whitman-Hanson's Goliath after dispatching of the Pembroke Titans Monday evening on enemy court. Junior forward Kevin McDonagh led all scorers with 16 points and junior point guard, captain Brian Malger, chipped in with eight points and eight assists. Senior guard Cedric Dybaud was a standout on defense.

"In this game, our defense basically just stepped up," said QHS head coach David Parry. "Cedric shut down their best scorer and Malger, my point guard, played a phenomenal game. He played solid man-to-man defense on their guards, never really letting Pembroke get into its offensive sets.

"On offense, he really got our offense rolling. It may have been his best game of the season; he controlled what we wanted to do offensively and was instrumental in us moving out of the preliminary round.

"McDonagh was also a big key. He has started to peak at the right time and is really coming on strong at the end of the season. He has picked a great time to improve; he is our go-to guy on offense, playing at the top of the key. Kevin is also a very good passer."

By defeating Pembroke High School (10-11 overall) for the third time this winter (60-59, Dec. 15 and 61-47, Feb. 1), Quincy, the number 17 seed in the field of 17, had to travel to Whitman to face the top-seeded Panthers last night; a game that would be their biggest challenge of the season, to say the least.

"Whitman-Hanson is the number 1 seed for a reason," said Parry on Tuesday. "They are a senior laden team with plenty of basketball talent on that roster. Coach Bob Rogers has really done a fine job with that program. Every player on his team can play; he might have nine to ten 'hoops' players on his roster and that makes a difference.

"They are tough team to prepare for because they have three-point shooters up and down the bench. The plan is to try and take away something from that attack. The first time we played them (88-66 defeat on Jan. 19) we tried to take away their inside game and it seemed to work in the first half. If I remember right we trailed by only four points at halftime, but because they are such a good shooting team, the floodgates opened up in the second half and that was that.

"But, as I told the team after the Pembroke game, the pressure is on them; they are supposed to win. We will have a loose practice on Tuesday and try and mix things up on Wednesday night. It will be an exciting and loud venue. It should be fun."

Win or lose last night, the Presidents should be proud of the fact they played hard enough this season to even get the right to be in a situation to advance to the DII quarterfinals. The team, after opening the season at 3-0, dropped to 4-9 overall after a 67-66 loss to Hingham HS on Jan. 29. But through grit and hard work, Quincy rallied to finish the year with ten wins and a second place finish in the Patriot League's Fisher Division.

"We will see if we can keep this going against Whitman-Hanson, but I am proud of the way we played to end the regular season and especially against Pembroke in the preliminary round game," said Parry. "I am happy for the seniors that they got that win. We aren't expected to beat them (W-H), but, like, I said before, it should be a fun game played in front of an electric crowd."

Notes: #1 W-H played #17 Quincy on Wednesday night. Other first round games on Quincy's side of the bracket-included #8 Hopkinton vs. #9 Plymouth North, #4 Falmouth vs. #13 Dennis-Yarmouth and #5 Duxbury vs. #12 Oliver Ames... Quincy seniors playing in their final state tournament include Adusei Kusi, Chris Clayton, Kevin Rhodes, Kenny Nguyen, Robbie Bina, Cedric Dybaud, Dan Andrade and Jed Leger... If the Presidents were to pull the upset over W-H, their next game would be on Feb. 26 at 7 p.m. at either Hopkinton HS or Plymouth North HS.

Quincy Girls Basketball

The Lady Presidents were seeded #16 in the Division I South Sectional bracket. Quincy (11-9 overall) played Tuesday night (after The Sun went to press) at home against #17 Brookline HS (11-9 overall) in a preliminary round game.

The winner of the Quincy/Brookline game will play today (Thursday) at 7 p.m. against #1 Wellesley High School; the winner of this first round game will play against the winner of the Newton South/Needham first round game on Feb. 27.

Notes: The DI South field has 22 teams... Quincy seniors Dora Tyson, Leslie Campbell, Julia Yee, Colleen Tobin and Olivia Berry are playing in their final state tournament... Wellesley (19-1), New Bedford (18-2), Whitman-Hanson (16-2), Marshfield (17-3) and Brockton (17-3) are the top-five teams in the DI South bracket.

Captured 130-Pound Individual State Crown

QHS Wrestler Josh Gerry Pins Down 2nd State Title

By SEAN BRENNAN

Josh Gerry, a senior at Quincy High School, earned his second straight Division II state wrestling title last weekend following a 7-0 decision over Needham High School's James Carroll. The tournament was held at Marshfield High School.

In the process, Gerry became the first QHS wrestler to win more than one individual state championship during a high school career.

Last winter, Gerry (36-1 overall, in 2009-10) picked up his first state title after defeating Joe Pronk of Marshfield High School, 17-5, in the 125-pound weight class; this season, Gerry captured the 130-pound state title.

"This year Josh has really improved his neutral position on the mat," said QHS head coach Patrick Lane on Tuesday. "His ability to take down his opponents this year has been amazing. He is wrestling very efficiently and you can see his maturity growing.

"He is focused and has improved himself in the way he sets up his shots to take down his opponent. He is very dominant when he wrestles on top or bottom and that comes from the time he has put in on the mats this season and during the off-season."

Gerry, who has now won three straight Division II Metro Sectional titles (the only QHS wrestler to accomplish that feat in a high school career), which is the tournament held before the state finals, defeated Carroll February 13 for the second time in a week. In the 130-pound division of the DII Metro Sectional finals, he dispatched of the Needham wrestler, 13-4, earning the top-seed at states.

"In the Metro Sectionals,

Carroll took Josh down two times, but he still won by major decision," said Lane. "I think that woke him up as he went into the individual state tournament. In that final, he was his dominant self and was relentless. He really did well using his shot defense against Carroll in the finals and it showed in the final result.

"Josh had been to a state final before and won. I think that it helped him this year because he had already wrestled on that stage and knew what it took to win. He was ready for it and I don't think it would have matter who he faced."

Next up for Gerry is this weekend's All-State tournament to be held at Salem High School on Friday and Saturday. This tournament pits the top-six finishers from each weight class in the state's three divisions against each other based on how each wrestler finished at the state tournament. The top-six finishers in each weight class at All-States advance to the New England Championships.

Gerry will most likely be seeded second, with his main competition for an All-State championship being Nick Flannery of Framingham High School.

"Nick Flannery and Josh will more than likely be ranked 1A and 1B at the All-States," added Lane. "That is the way they have been ranked all winter long. Things may happen but it looks like it will shake out that Josh and Flannery face each other again this year in the final.

"Josh has wrestled most of the wrestlers who will be ranked between 1-10 in the 130-pound weight class. He should have a good chance to win at All-States this weekend."

Flannery beat Gerry, 8-6, in last year's 125-pound All-State final. Flannery's title last year was not without controversy. Many in attendance at last year's tournament felt that a couple of official calls did not go the Quincy resident's way, but that, according to Lane, is not the motivation Gerry is going to need to come away with an All-State championship.

"I do not think (last year's results) that is going to be any extra motivation for Josh. In my six years of coaching at Quincy High School, he is the most focused and arguably the best wrestler I have ever coached. He has put in his time and will be ready for any challenge."

QHS Hockey Hall of Famer Bob Sylvia Stepping Down

COACHING LEGEND SET TO RETIRE: Bob Sylvia, the iconic head coach at QHS, is retiring after 45 years behind the bench. Sylvia, who took over at QHS in 1965, has taken numerous teams to the state tournament, has dealt with tragedy and triumph and will go down as one of the best high school hockey coaches in the state's history. His team, this winter, finished the regular season at 10-10-1 overall and qualified, once again, for the state hockey tournament.

TEAM CAPTAIN senior Kevin Keith (right) and assistant captain, junior Derek Murphy, presented Bob Sylvia with a poster signed by all of the members of this year's Quincy Presidents. The pregame ceremonies highlighted a memorable night at the QYA. Sylvia is set to retire at the end of the playoff season.

SENIOR CAPTAIN KEVIN KEITH rips a shot on net during last week's 4-2 Patriot League loss to Hanover High School. Keith and the rest of the Quincy Presidents opened first-round play in the Division II South Sectional hockey tournament earlier this week against Coyle-Cassidy High School. The winner of this first-round game will play a quarterfinal matchup against top-seed Nauset High School.

5-4 Win Over Pembroke Punches Ticket Presidents Fight Way Into Postseason

A disappointing 4-2 loss to Hanover High School last Wednesday night at the Quincy Youth Arena could have taken the wind out of the sails of the Quincy High School hockey team's hopes of advancing to the Division II South Sectional tournament, but it didn't, as the team responded the next morning, on short rest, by beating Pembroke High School, 5-4, to punch their ticket to the postseason.

Quincy def. Pembroke, 5-4

Junior forward Derek Murphy scored three goals and senior captain Kevin Keith added three assists as the Quincy Presidents punched their ticket to the Division II South Sectional hockey tournament with a 5-4 win over Pembroke High School on Feb. 18.

Senior captain Jim Finn added a goal and an assist for Quincy (10-10-1 overall) and senior goalie Leroy Wallace made 28 saves.

Hanover def. Quincy, 4-2

The game against Hanover High School was an evening filled with emotion. QHS head coach Bob Sylvia and the Presidents matched up against Sylvia's younger brother, Jim, and his Hanover High School team. Sylvia, who is retiring after 45 years behind the bench for QHS, was recognized in a pregame ceremony by current and former players alike, by family, friends and colleagues and by legions of local hockey fans from Quincy.

The Presidents entered this game needing to earn one-point (out of a possible four points) in their final two games.

Hanover's Ian Concannon gave the visitors an early 1-0 first period lead, but Quincy responded with two goals in the second period to take the lead. The Presidents' Chris Murch tied the game at 1-1 and junior captain Derek Murphy scored on a tip-in off senior forward Matt Troy's slap shot at the buzzer, and Quincy entered the final period up 2-1.

Hanover (13-4-3 overall) responded in the third period, scoring two goals within 30 seconds of one another to take a 3-2 lead. Greg Thompson and Alex Manser scored the goals; Evan Shea completed the scoring with an empty net tally as the clock ran down.

Hanover took home the Sylvia Cup. This cup, in future seasons, will be awarded to the annual winner of the Quincy-Hanover game.

Notes: Quincy (10-10-1) was the ninth seed in the DII South Sectionals... The team played #8 Coyle-Cassidy HS (10-9-1) in a first-round game earlier this week... The winner of the Quincy/Coyle-Cassidy game will play against #1 ranked Nauset HS (17-2-1) in the quarterfinals this weekend.

HEAD COACH BOB SYLVIA (center) gives instruction to his Quincy Presidents during first period action against Hanover. Sylvia, a Massachusetts Hockey Hall of Famer, will retire after 45 years behind the bench for Quincy. Sylvia, who also coached boys' soccer, girls' tennis, baseball and golf at QHS during his 45 years at the high school, is among the top-10 all-time tenured coaches in MA high school hockey history.

Race Name: 'The Half of Quincy'

Quincy To Host Half Marathon March 21

Quincy is joining in on the fun and popularity that is the half marathon.

On March 21, the first annual 'The Half of Quincy,' a 13.1 mile distance race will be held, joining the city's other road racing opportunities, not the least of which is the Quantum 5 'Race of Champions' held annually on the last Thursday in June.

This new race will give runners a unique opportunity to cruise through the city while testing their fitness level. Starting at the current and soon to be brand new Quincy High School—just outside Quincy Square—the race travels by Mt. Wollaston Cemetery through Merrymount, along Wollaston Beach, around the Squantum Peninsula and Marina Bay, along the Neponset River, by the State Street South Complex, through Montclair, Wollaston, West Quincy, on Adams Street by the Adams National Historic Park and back to QHS through Quincy Center, passing Quincy City Hall, the Hancock Cemetery and the United First Parish Church.

The race will be a way to provide a time trail for all those runners taking part in the Boston Marathon, which will be held on April 19. This race, which has been enthusiastically welcomed by the city, will generate funds for the running programs at the city's two high schools, four middle schools, as well as the Quincy Track Club, the Quincy Police Department's DARE program and the Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge.

Runners receive technical shirts specifically designed for the race by Keezer Sportswear. Participants will be hosted by QHS with registration and number pickup in the school's auditorium and bag drop off and pickup after the race in the school's cafeteria.

For additional information regarding 'The Half of Quincy' road race, whether to run in it, volunteer, become a sponsor or just watch and encourage the runners, visit www.halfofquincy.com or reach JJ Lerner, race director, at kellyandjj@aol.com or at 617-909-6726.

TOM CONLEY, left, and Mike Lebel, are two of the six Quincy residents currently playing Division I college baseball.

Six Residents Currently Playing

Quincy Represented On DI College Baseball Scene

The city of Quincy, this spring, will have a record number of residents playing Division I college baseball. When the college season begins later this month, Quincy will have six student-athletes playing at the highest level of collegiate baseball, surpassing last year's record of four residents.

Returning for a second season of Division I baseball competition are Mike Lebel (3B/SS at the University of Rhode Island, Atlantic-10 Rookie All-Star in 2009); Tom Conley (catcher for the University of Massachusetts, Atlantic-10 Rookie All-Star in 2009); Glen Misho (pitcher, University of Massachusetts) and Scott Warwick (pitcher, Fairfield University).

Joining the four returning players are two newcomers. These first-year players are Ricky Salvucci (3B, Northeastern University) and Kevin Magoon (pitcher, Sacred Heart University).

These six players, who are all products of local high schools and American Legion programs, will square off against one another at the collegiate level. Lebel will have the most games against his Quincy counterparts, as URI has three games scheduled against conference rival UMass, two games against cross-state rival Northeastern University, and single games against Fairfield University and Sacred Heart University.

UMass has a single game scheduled against NU and Fairfield has a single game scheduled against Sacred Heart University.

For additional information on these six Quincy residents, contact Bob Griffin at 617-472-4811.

Quincy's Samantha Curran Earned Accolades

Samantha Curran, a junior at Cardinal Spellman High School in Brockton, was recently recognized for her play on the school's girls' varsity volleyball team.

Curran, a setter, was named the Catholic Central League's Most Valuable Player (MVP), as well as a league all-star; she was also named the team MVP. Curran was named to The Enterprise's All-League team.

She finished the fall season with 196 digs, 283 service points, 141 aces, 423 assists and 36 kills.

Curran also plays for the Mass Patriots Junior Volleyball League.

Cyr & Farrell Boxing Gym Now Offering Weekend Lessons

Nick Cyr and Jimmy Farrell are now offering weekend boxing lesson for kids' ages 8-16 years of age at the Cyr & Farrell Boxing Gym, located at 1452 Hancock St., Quincy Center.

The lessons, held Saturday and Sundays, are $6 for one day and $10 for the entire weekend.

Cyr, a winner of six Junior Titles and Farrell, a former New England Amateur and Professional Boxing Champion, and a trainer of over 20 National Boxing Champions, will teach the lessons.

Youngsters will have the opportunity to train alongside some of the best local amateur boxing talent in the area, including 2010 Golden Glove champions Steven Farrar and Amanda Pavone, and professional boxers, including Mark "The Bazooka" DeLuca and Ryan "The Polish Prince" Kielezweski.

In addition to the daily training, the Cyr & Farrell Boxing Gym is offering a boxing boot camp, a six-week program, and a special bikini boot camp, also a six-week program. Fitness guru Alfredo Denizard designs both of these programs.

Milton Hospital Annual Spring Fundraiser May 20

Milton Hospital, a clinical affiliate of Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center providing community-based health care, will hold its "Swing into Spring" fundraising gala Thursday, May 20 at Lombardo's in Randolph.

Proceeds from this year's event are designated toward purchasing new medical equipment.

Chaired by Carol Fallon and Dr. and Mrs. Clifford Gluck, this year's event will feature a silent and live auction, entertainment provided by The Ovations and special ballroom dance performances.

Guests will have the option to purchase a "Backstage Pass" ticket package, which will include a private reception and dance performance, silent auction preview, open bar and passed hors d'oeuvres.

Net proceeds from this year's fundraiser will go toward purchasing capital equipment, specifically the IntelliVue portable networked patient monitor. IntelliVue monitors aid in treatment by collecting, combining, and cross-referencing vital data to provide a complete picture of a patient's status.

"The new technology further enhances Milton Hospital's commitment to innovation and quality patient care," said Joseph Morrissey, president of Milton Hospital. "We are so appreciative of the support we receive from the community each year at this annual fundraising event."

Sponsorships, advertising and donations are currently being accepted. Tickets are $125, or $175 for the "Backstage Pass", and can be purchased online at www.miltonhospital.org, or by calling Stephanie Shunda, Development Associate, at 617-313-1194.

John Adams HealthCare Center
Receives Deficiency Free DPH Survey

John Adams HealthCare Center, 211 Franklin St., Quincy, has completed its annual Department of Public Health State Survey.

The facility was found to have no deficiencies in all areas that were surveyed.

John Adams is a 71-bed skilled nursing and short-term rehabilitation center, and has been meeting the needs of seniors for more than 40 years.

In addition to this excellent inspection report from the state, John Adams HealthCare Center has been accredited by the Joint Commission and been given its Gold Seal of Approval.

The process is designed to help the facility continuously provide safe, high-quality care, treatment, and services by identifying opportunities to implement improvements on an on-going basis.

If you are 45 years and older, overweight and have high-risk factors such as high blood pressure and cholesterol, you should ask your doctor for a diabetes test during routine visits, says Dr. Ann Sheehy, a hospitalist at University of Wisconsin Hospital and Clinics.

Just in time for National Sleep Awareness Week, March 8-14, TOPS Club, Inc. (Take Off Pounds Sensibly), the nonprofit weight-loss support organization, explains the connection between obesity and sleep habits.

According to TOPS, studies show a link between too few hours of sleep and increased body weight in both adults and children.

"Our society is an insomniac, underslept society, perhaps because of economic stress, chaotic lifestyles, or sedentary time spent with modern media, such as the Internet or cable TV," says Nicholas "Dr. Nick" Yphantides, M.D., M.P.H., medical spokesperson for TOPS. "Sleep is an afterthought to many of us."

Dr. Nick points out that insomnia often leads to late-night eating binges, which are proven to be disruptive to the digestive cycle and result in weight gain. "Falling asleep with a full stomach means you are less likely to eat breakfast, which is an essential part of maintaining a healthy lifestyle," he says. "Every study of successful long-term weight loss shows that the eating plan includes a healthy breakfast."

Lack of sleep also affects

"Since Type 2 diabetes is often asymptomatic, most people are not aware they have the disease until they have a blood test showing elevated blood glucose," she said.

Doctors may also miss the diagnosis because one of the two main national screening guidelines they use doesn't identify about one-third of those with diabetes.

That's what Sheehan and collaborators found in a study comparing the two guidelines—one from the American Diabetes Association (ADA), the other from the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF).

According to the study, the USPSTF guideline, which recommends diabetes screening only for people with high blood pressure, missed the mark substantially. The ADA test was much more reliable.

twenty to thirty minutes each day and no later than three hours before bedtime.

• When tired enough to seek coffee and energy drinks, take a short, half-hour nap instead.

• Go to bed and get up at about the same time every day, even on weekends.

• Keep bedrooms cool, dark, quiet, and comfortable. Consider a sound machine or small fan for white noise and an eye mask to block out light.

• Follow a relaxing bedtime routine, such as reading a book, engaging in light stretching, or taking a bath.

Viral Infection
Can Cause
Dizziness

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I got a sudden attack of dizziness that landed me in bed. I couldn't stand. Finally, with the help of my husband, I got to the doctor, who said I had a viral infection called vestibular neuritis. I am taking medicine and am somewhat better, but the dizziness isn't completely gone. Will it go? When? —L.T.

ANSWER: I have to warn readers that the causes of dizziness are diverse, and vestibular neuritis, while common, is only one of many causes. The vestibule of the inner ear has three fluid-filled canals that work like a carpenter's balance, that gadget whose center contains a fluid-containing tube with a bubble in it. The balance tells the carpenter if a piece of wood is aligned. The inner ear canals tell people if they are aligned. They send signals to the brain that keep us balanced. A viral infection of those canals or of the nerve that sends signals to the brain makes people feel like they've been put in the spin cycle of a washer.

Not only are affected people dizzy, they become nauseated and often throw up.

Symptoms of vestibular neuritis lessen in two to three days, but full recovery can take up to six or more weeks.

A cortisone drug taken within the first three days of illness can ease symptoms. And medicines like promethazine relieve dizziness and nausea, but they make some people so drowsy that they prefer the dizziness.

The booklet on dizziness discusses vestibular neuritis as well as the other dizziness causes. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue — No. 801W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Can you give an explanation of and recommendation for cure of a health problem I have? Being over the age of 65 and in reasonably good health, I suffer every winter from painful cracks in my fingertips and the soles of my feet. —R.V.

ANSWER: The cracking indicates your skin is drying out. You can restore moisture to your fingertips with a light coat — just a dab will do you — of petroleum jelly (Vaseline or another moisturizer) before going to bed. Put Band-Aids over your fingertips, and leave them on all night. You can do the same during the day, but it's a bit inconvenient. In about three days, the cracks should be filling in. Continue this treatment every third or fourth night.

The same thing works for the feet. You don't use Band-Aids, but you do cover your feet with socks before going to sleep. Don't apply petroleum jelly during the daytime. It might make you somewhat unsteady. It takes longer for feet to heal.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Does the consumption of foods packaged or wrapped in aluminum foil pose a risk for contracting or accelerating Alzheimer's disease? —M.E.

ANSWER: The answer is no. The brains of some Alzheimer's patients have more than the usual amount of aluminum. Some have interpreted that as indicating aluminum as a cause. Few scientists hold to that theory.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

VOICE FOR HEALTH

by Dr. Gabrielle Freedman
Chiropractor

PAINFUL REALITY

Unless chronic pain sufferers take the necessary steps, they may fall into a downward spiral of physical inactivity that leads to continued pain and loss of strength and flexibility. Conversely, others afflicted with constant pain may overexert themselves in an attempt to prove they will not succumb to their condition. However, this, too, may lead to more inactivity as the exertion brings on more pain. Either way, "unconditioned" individuals with chronic pain are likely to become more frustrated and depressed, which further fuels the problem. In order to break this vicious cycle, chronic pain sufferers are urged to see a chiropractor with the goal of eliminating the pain at its source and allowing their strengthened bodies to move as intended.

Chronic pain may affect daily activities. The point at which pain has become chronic cannot be precisely defined and must be diagnosed on a case-by-case basis. All pain has the potential to become chronic. At the FAMILY PRACTICE OF CHIROPRACTIC, our concern is the total health of our patients. A continuing schedule of regular chiropractic checkups can help detect, correct, and maintain optimum spinal and nervous system function. Please call 617.472.4220 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 112 McGrath Hwy., Quincy. No matter where you live in Eastern Mass., we can offer you exceptional chiropractic service.

P.S. If pain is a symptom of an underlying condition, it makes sense to address the cause in order to eliminate its effect(s).

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

DRYING EFFECTS

Patients with symptoms of "dry mouth" should notify the dentist. Not only can reduced saliva production lead to difficulty speaking, swallowing, persistent bad breath, and chapped/cracked lips, it can also potentially contribute to cavities, gingivitis, and other dental problems. Once the dentist is made aware of dry mouth, there are ways to measure saliva production and evaluate the problem. Because dry mouth is a side effect of various drugs, a proper evaluation also entails a patient's detailed description of any medications that he or she is taking. If dry mouth only occurs at night, it may be a symptom of a nasal obstruction that may require further medication evaluation. Dry mouth is also a symptom of some autoimmune disorders.

For many people, a dry mouth is only an occasional annoyance. Persistent dry mouth may increase the risk of tooth decay and periodontal disease. When was the last time you had a complete dental exam? We make a thorough evaluation of existing and potential problems. Nothing is more economical than regular checkups. Small developing problems can be corrected before they become serious problems. Call us today at 617-479-6220 to schedule a convenient appointment for the highest quality dental care. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. It is normal for saliva production to decline by as much as 40 percent as we grow older.

OBITUARIES

Frances M. Adams, 90

Secretary Quincy Public Schools

A funeral Mass for Frances Margaret (Morrissey) Adams, 90, of Quincy, was celebrated Feb. 18 in St. John the Baptist Church, Quincy.

Mrs. Adams died Feb. 13.

A lifelong resident of Quincy, she was educated in Quincy and attended St. John the Baptist Elementary School (Class of 1934), the Woodward Institute (Class of 1938), and was elected president of her class. She continued her education at the Hickox Secretarial School in Boston, graduating in 1940, where she was hired following graduation. In 1942, she left teaching to marry her late husband, WWII veteran, Thomas Dana Adams, Sr., who was then a noted professional golfer.

Re-entering the workforce late in life, she worked for many years at the business offices of the Quincy Public Schools under Mr. Steve Moynihan, and later in her career as the secretary to the Supt. of Quincy Public Schools, Dr. Larry Creedon, both of whom she admired, liked and respected. They remained friends until her passing. At the time of her retirement in 1984, she was Clerk of the Quincy School Committee.

Friends, family and acquaintances referred to Mrs. Adams, as a woman with dignity, intelligence, work ethic, strength, morality, faith and kindness. She was also a voracious reader and lover of classical music and volunteered her time often, including at the Eventide Retirement Home and for AARP, and donated to many charities for the betterment of others.

FRANCES M. ADAMS

She was a lifelong member of St. John the Baptist Church.

Wife of the late Thomas Dana Adams, Sr.; mother of Susan Reilly of Braintree, Ted and Glenda Adams of Marshfield, Richard and Caren Adams of Newton; Philip Adams of Quincy, Douglas and Iris Adams of Andover and James and Robyn Adams of Quincy; sister of Ms. Jean Morrissey; former mother-in-law of Billie Jo Adams of Wapole; close friend of Phyllis Mortenson and Eleanor Burrell; and also survived by 12 grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren and one great great-grandchild.

Interment was in Mount Wollaston Cemetery, Quincy.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

All of us want our cars to run smoothly and efficiently so we take time to have them checked to make sure that all mechanical aids are in running order... Let's think about another important check-up to be made. How's your driving mental attitude? Can't you go over that and tighten it up a little? Fill it with courtesy. For in that word... Courtesy...

...can be found the key to most of our driving ills.

Courtesy often is nothing more than a highly developed sense of fair play... A friend told me once of driving along a narrow, unpaved mountain road. Ahead was another car that produced clouds of choking dust and it was a long way to the nearest paved highway. Suddenly, at a wider place, the car ahead pulled off the road. My friend, thinking there might be engine trouble, stopped and asked if anything was wrong. "No," said the other driver. "But you've endured my dust thus far; I'll put up with yours the rest of the way." There was a man of good manners, a man with an innate sense of fair play.

Perhaps if all motorists were more courteous, possessed of the same degree of consideration as this driver, we would witness an automotive death rate far lower than ever imagined!

HERE IS A PLEASANT LITTLE GAME that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner and check one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Salome's Stars

ARIES (March 21 to April 19)
Having second thoughts could be a good thing, even if you're determined to go through with your plans. You might find it worthwhile to take a fresh look at how things have been set up.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20)
Financial matters could continue to be a problem until you're able to straighten out some of the more pesky situations. Once that happens, the rest should be easier to unravel.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20)
Family matters once again take center stage, and should be dealt with competently and quickly. And, again, insist on others taking on their fair share of the responsibilities.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22)
Your creative pursuits seem to be running into a roadblock. But rather than blame outside factors, look within to see if you might be holding back your efforts for some reason.

LEO (July 23 to August 22)
Keep that keen Cat's Eye focused on relevant aspects of this new situation in your life. Don't be distracted by trivial matters. You need the pertinent facts before making a decision.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22)
As much as you prefer doing things on your own, continue to accept help if you still need to resolve the problem affecting your project. Some cheerful news is about to come your way.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22)
While you might be grudge the added time it will take to get your project from point A to B to C, etc., you could benefit from the facts that will emerge over this expanded time span.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21)
Regarding your workplace suggestions, be prepared to produce the facts to counter reactions from skeptics who feel your approach is unreasonable or even impossible.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21)
Savvy Sagittarians will look for work-related answers on their own rather than rely on unproved assumptions. It might take more time to do so, but the payoff is worth it.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19)
Your aspects continue to favor family issues, with special emphasis this week on changes in and around your home. Get everyone to suggest what he or she would like to see done.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18)
A matter you thought had been settled might still produce surprises. Best advice: Continue to gather facts to bolster your position just in case you need to produce them quickly.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20)
While your instincts are usually right when discerning 'twist truth and deception, you could benefit from doing more research on the new "prospect" that you've been pitched.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your wisdom is only matched by your generosity, making you the sort of friend everyone hopes to have.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On March 6, 1475, Michelangelo Buonarroti, the greatest of the Italian Renaissance artists, is born. His most important early work was the Pieta (1498), a sculpture that showed the body of Christ in the lap of the Virgin Mary. Demonstrating masterful skill, Michelangelo extracted the two perfectly balanced figures of the Pieta from a single block of marble.

• On March 3, 1873, Congress enacts the so-called Comstock Law, making it illegal to send any "obscene, lewd or lascivious" book through the mails. The law was named after Anthony Comstock, a salesman from Connecticut, who devoted his life to fighting what he perceived as vice, particularly obscenity and gambling.

• On March 4, 1888, Knute Rockne is born in Voss, Norway. He would go on to become one of the most successful coaches in the history of college football. In his 13 years as coach of Notre Dame, he recorded 105 wins, 12 losses and 5 ties for a winning percentage of .881, the highest in the history of college or professional football.

• On March 1, 1897, the Winton Motor Carriage Company is organized in Cleveland, with Alexander Winton as president. A year later, Winton won a race at Daytona Beach, Fla., driving his Winton Bullet to an average speed of 68 mph and becoming the first person to break the mile-per-minute barrier.

• On March 2, 1925, the first nationwide highway numbering system is instituted to minimize confusion. Later, interstate highway numbering would be improved by colored signs and the odd-even demarcation that distinguishes between north-south and east-west travel, respectively.

• On March 7, 1955, the first Broadway play to be televised in color, featuring the original cast, airs. The play was "Peter Pan," starring Mary Martin.

• On March 5, 1963, the Hula-Hoop, a hip-swiveling toy that became a huge fad across America when it was first marketed by Wham-O in 1958, is patented. An estimated 25 million Hula-Hoops were sold in its first four months of production alone. Following the Hula-Hoop, Wham-O produced the Superball, Water Wiggle, Silly String, Slip 'n' Slide and the Hacky Sack.

Keenan Fears Bleak Finances

Councillor John Keenan wants the mayor to consider possible layoffs, the sale of city property, closing branch libraries, eliminating summer job programs, and new wage deferrals in preparation for the economic storms ahead.

Keenan, also, wants a review of the current budget and expenditures before looking forward to 2011 budget proposals.

"We should look at the way the City does business, and explore all short and long-term savings possibilities.... It's important that we finish this year in balance, as we prepare for Fiscal Year 2011 which promises to be very difficult," said Keenan, Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Possible cutbacks in the state's local aid and the city's declining receipts are among the major reasons for slashing next year's spending and reviewing the current budget, according to Keenan.

The resolve is intended as a starting point for budget discussions, according to Keenan who said, "Some of the ideas...in the resolve are controversial and some may not provide great savings or generate significant revenue, but the purpose of the resolve is to generate discussion and prompt a serious analysis of the City can meet the financial challenges it confronts next year, and in the following years."

Keenan outlined the need to consider layoffs in every city department from the police, school and fire departments to the Department of Public Works in a resolve submitted to City Council

Koch Executive Order Guarantees:

Full Compensation For Active Duty Employees

Mayor Thomas Koch has issued an executive order guaranteeing that City workers who are called to active duty in the military receive full benefits while serving overseas.

"We have many employees - especially our police and firefighters - who make great sacrifices to serve our country, and their families should not be hurt financially because of that service,"

Koch said. "We are committed to doing our part to protect our active-duty servicemen and women."

The order, variations of which have been issued by previous administrations, means that City employees called overseas will be compensated by the City for any difference between their regular salary and military pay. Employees will maintain all insurance coverage as well, the order states.

Since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001 and the beginning of the war in Afghanistan in 2002, more than two dozen City employees have been called to active duty overseas, and a number of them have been called to duty more than once, officials said.

To be covered by the order, employees must show documentation of their service and they must show that their military salary is less than the City compensation.

"This is something that is small from a spending perspective, but it can make a big difference to our men and women who serve overseas and their families," Koch said. "Quincy has always stood together with its veterans, and I hope this will be another example."

Koch, Gutro, School Building Committee Seeking Input

Public Meeting March 11 On Central Project

Mayor Thomas Koch together with the Central Middle School Building Committee and Ward 5 City Councillor Douglas Gutro will co-host a community meeting to outline plans to date on replacing the aging school and answer questions from residents at 7 p.m. on March 11 at the current Central on Hancock Street.

"We are moving forward on this vital project, and we want to keep the community involved every step of the way," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "This will be a great opportunity to discuss the need for a new Central, our choice of location, and why now is the right time to get this done."

Added Councillor Gutro:

"This is an important meeting not just for parents and employees of Central Middle School but neighbors as well. I want to be certain that those living near the proposed middle school site have a say in its design and that those living near the current school understand the city's current thinking on the future use possibilities for that site."

The Central Building Committee, which is co-hosting the event, is now in the process of working with the Massachusetts School Building Authority to select an architect for the project, and the Koch administration is working on land agreements for the proposed

Progress Made To Offset $4M Budget Shortfall, QMC President Tells City Councillors

New Programs, Partnerships Key To Stabilizing QMC Finances

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Increased costs and diminishing income won't keep Quincy Medical Center from succeeding, according to the center's CEO and president, Dr. Gary W. Gibbons, who told City Council Monday, "Failure is not an option."

Dr. Gibbons outlined the bare-bones budget facing the center which currently is battling a $4 million deficit. He hopes to remedy the deficit through cost-cutting and be back in the black by September.

"We really have made progress," Dr. Gibbons said, adding, "Our losses have diminished."

Despite the financial problems, Dr. Gibbons said the center sailed through an accreditation review and its recent audit and he would like to encourage more local fund-raising initiatives.

More importantly, he said QMC offers top-notch medical services that can easily match or surpass care offered in Boston's hospitals and, also, is continuing its focus on offering a friendly, clean, and welcoming facility for those who are sick and their families.

QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER CEO Dr. Gary W. Gibbons (center) told City Council Monday that the QMC will succeed despite the current financial downturn. With Dr. Gibbons are Janice Sullivan, External Relations, and Jon Nelson, Facilities Engineer.

"Boston teaching hospitals want our patients," said Dr. Gibbons, estimating that there's no comparison to the high cost, but the local services are as good if not better.

"We can compete with anyone," said Dr. Gibbons, adding, "You don't have to go in-town (to Boston)."

Dr. Gibbons said that no cutback would affect the medical center's mission to provide the best medical care possible to the community.

"We have had some layoffs. None of them has been pleasant," reported Dr. Gibbons.

Community hospitals are in a battle for survival in what Dr. Gibbons called "an arms race." He cited two major reasons for the financial woes confronting local hospitals after noting that two thirds of the community hospitals are in trouble.

The first is the federal government's formula for reimbursement which only covers 84% of the cost of patient care, according to Dr. Gibbons who said he has reluctantly joined five other hospitals in a lawsuit for unpaid expenses.

"We just want to be paid fairly for the services we supply," said Dr. Gibbons.

The future looks even more grim, according to Dr. Gibbons who said, "they are going to take another significant (piece) out of Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements."

In addition, Dr. Gibbons said for-profits and local centers are siphoning off the hospitals' former income-producing profits by offering offsite non-invasive procedures.

In order to meet the challenges, Dr. Gibbons said the center will "replace competition with partnerships" and new programs.

Among the initiatives the center will explore is a Center For Healthy Aging which will offer wellness programs, disease prevention for older residents which Dr. Gibbons noted is the fastest growing segment of the country's population.

"The system is broken," said Dr. Gibbons, noting that reimbursements "keep ratcheting down" and are "being reimbursed on a percentage of costs."

The future should include regional partnerships with different hospitals focusing on specialized programs.

"We've all been in our own little silos," said Dr. Gibbons who predicts an end to competition among hospitals and the formation of new partnerships.

Dr. Gibbons, also, suggested that the federal health care reform proposals would only aggravate the reimbursement problems facing hospitals.

Councillors invited Dr. Gibbons to present a report on Quincy Medical Center after published reports de-tailoring the center's financial problems in an effort to see if the city could help.

Councillors Douglas Gutro, Ward 5, and Kevin Coughlin, Ward 3, both praised Dr. Gibbons for working with nearby residents on neighborhood issues.

In his opening statement, Dr. Gibbons said the hospital recently turned on "a brand new power plant that has eliminated the black soot" that disturbed residents.

Gutro noted that any threat to the hospital's health not only affects the patients, but also, Quincy's 90,000 residents, "Everyone has a stake in Quincy Medical Center."

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymond cited the importance of Quincy Medical Center as the city "Number 5 Employer."

Both Coughlin and Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee described the excellent care experienced by their relatives at QMC.

"The care was second to none," said McNamee, adding, "You're on the right track."

Coughlin said, "The importance of QMC can not be underscored enough."

"Having a community hospital is one of the benchmarks of a world-class city, he added."

Koch said officials will discuss the history of Central and efforts to date to replace the school building, which state authorities consider among the most in need of replacement in all of Massachusetts.

"Talking directly with the community is an important part of this project. We want to ensure we are working closely with all of the stakeholders that are involved and that the project is fully vetted as we move forward," said School Committee member Anne Mahoney, who is on the Central Building Committee. "I know the committee is looking forward to updating residents on our progress to date and to answer any questions."

School Committee member Jo-Ann Bragg, another Central committee member, added:

"We are working in close collaboration with the MSBA, moving forward in a very orderly way. Keeping the community informed about the progress we've made and our plans for the coming months is part of that larger process."

THE SEA-WORTHY GEMSTONE
As one might surmise, March's birthstone derives its name from the Latin "aqua marina," which translates to "water of the sea." This member of the beryl family, which also includes emerald, ranges in color from nearly colorless to blue-green or teal. Aside from also ranking quite high on the Mohs Scale of Hardness (7.5-8 out of 10), aquamarine is breathtakingly clear in very large sizes. With this in mind, consideration of the color of aquamarine should take precedence over the size of the gemstone when assessing its desirability and value. That is to say that it may be preferable to have a one-carat richly hued blue-green aquamarine than a 3-carat, pale-blue gemstone of equal clarity.

It has sometimes been said that wearing jewelry made with March's birthstone brings love and affection. What more could anyone want—love, affection, and a gorgeous aquamarine from our beautiful displays? We carry many exquisite gemstones from around the world, set in shimmering precious metals in unique, creative designs. Do you know someone with a birthday in March or who is celebrating their 19th year of marriage (aquamarine is also their accepted gemstone)? Expected To Open At St. Joseph's School Next Fall

Delahunt Presents $1M Federal Grant For New Head Start Learning Center

By JOE REARDON
The future Head Start Early Learning Program Center received a huge shot in the arm Tuesday when a $1 million check in federal funding was presented to the Quincy Community Action Program (QCAP) by U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt and Mayor Tom Koch at the Saint Joseph's School in Quincy Point.

"I have been waiting to say those words for about 10 years," said QCAP's Executive Director Beth Ann Strollo.

The center, which is expected to open in the fall of 2011, will have 30,000 square feet of early childhood space, including 16 classrooms for up to 240 toddlers and preschoolers. It will serve Quincy, Braintree, Weymouth, Milton and Hull.

Construction will include repairing building deficiencies including addition of an elevator, replacing the roof, refurbishing current classrooms, adding bathrooms, redesigning the existing gym to add 4,400 square feet needed for classrooms. The project will create 150 construction-related jobs. The total development cost for acquisition and renovation are estimated to be $7 million. Approximately $5 million of that total will be for construction-related costs. The kitchen will be renovated and a playground built.

The project will be revitalizing the closed Saint Joseph's School in a neighborhood where Head Start-eligible children live.

Strollo praised the efforts of Delahunt and Koch in securing the funds for the center. She said that building a center was not a line-item project and Delahunt advocated aggressively in Washington for the funds. Strollo went on to say Quincy is fortunate to have a mayor and congressman who work so close together.

"Very early on they lent their support to this project," she said. "Without their support we knew we couldn't get far. It's a big award. It's a significant financial award for this kind of thing."

Koch downplayed his role in the project moving forward. "This is a great day," he said. "All I did was try to make some phone calls and get people in contact with each other. Thank you Congressman Delahunt for bringing home the bacon."

Delahunt said it was "ironic" that a catholic school was being renovated into a center to help children. "It's ironic in one way that we're in a catholic school," he said. "It's our responsibility to take care of others. Today the government is making the commitment as well."

"It's about community and taking care of people."

Delahunt pointed out that Monday was Dr. Seuss' birthday and donated one of his books to the library. The congressman was also presented a "Thank You Congressman Delahunt" framed crayon drawing from Head Start Policy Council Chairperson Holly Stoke on behalf of the children.

QCAP was incorporated in 1965, and is one of 24 Massachusetts Community Action Agencies. It delivers multiple services that are designed to support people in crisis, as well as provide low-income households with a path for teaching economic self-sufficiency. The programs serve many communities in Norfolk County and the South Shore.

Officer Steven Barrett: A Life Fulfilled, A Memory That Serves

Steven Barrett touched a lot of lives during his all-too-short life.

He experienced extreme joy and profound sorrow, too.

More than 10 years after his own tragic death, his indomitable spirit lives on through loving family and devoted friends who can laugh while recalling Steven's unique sense of humor and then shed a tear for the young man who died just four months after fulfilling a lifelong dream.

"At 22 years of age, I have to tell you, Steven lived a very full life," his father, Chris Barrett says. "He fulfilled a lifelong dream of becoming a police officer. That was his goal since he was in the fourth grade."

"When he got to high school, he took law enforcement classes. He got to college and he took law enforcement classes. And when he graduated from college, he went right to Nantucket to become a police officer. He really did what he dreamed of doing in his life."

Steven Barrett was a three-sport star at Quincy High School, excelling at hockey, golf and baseball before graduating in 1995. He was inducted into the school's Hockey and Baseball Halls of Fame in his first year of eligibility.

After receiving his criminal justice degree from Westfield State College in May of 1999, Steven joined the Nantucket Police Department as a seasonal officer.

"He wanted to get on a police force and not being a veteran, he needed to get some experience and Nantucket hires police officers for the summer. He went down there in the spring time and they hired him," recalls Chris, who works as a security officer at North Quincy High School.

"He went right from college to the Nantucket Police Department. He loved it."

Police work suited Steven as well. Town folk looked forward to seeing the handsome officer patrolling the streets or working a detail. The department commended him for apprehending a robbery suspect.

"He was proud of that commendation," an equally proud father points out.

Steven and one other officer were asked to remain on the force after summer. Steven planned to become a permanent police officer that fall and attend the police academy in the winter.

Then tragedy struck. In the early morning of Sept. 30, 1999, Steven was driving back to the barracks when his car went off the wet road and struck a tree. He died a short-time later. It's not known what exactly caused the accident, but there were leaves on the street and deer frequently cross the long and winding road.

Ironically, Steven was planning to come home to Quincy the day he died to take part in a benefit breast cancer walk. He and other family members were to walk in memory of Steven's mother, Doreen, who had died of breast cancer in 1993.

"Instead of walking in memory of his mother," Chris remembers, "that Sunday we were waking him. He was buried that Monday."

Well over 1,000 mourners paid their respects at the Sweeney Brothers Home for Funerals and crowded inside Saint John the Baptist Church for his funeral Mass. Steven's pallbearers were three Quincy friends and three police officers from Nantucket. They walked alongside the hearse from Quincy High School to Steven's final resting place at Mount Wollaston Cemetery. A large contingent of law enforcement from Quincy and other departments joined the tearful procession.

It was only a handful of years earlier that Steven himself helped soothe the loss of another young life.

Steven and Matt Messing were teammates on the QHS hockey team. Steven was a 17-year-old senior, Matt a 16-year-old sophomore on the Presidents squad. Playing against rival North Quincy High School Jan. 18, 1995, Messing was checked legally by a North Quincy player. Messing died of cardiac arrest from the routine on-ice hit.

That same night, Steven – who was the captain of the hockey team – took it upon himself to visit the shaken player and console him and tell him the tragedy was not his fault.

"He had been through his mom's passing, and he could handle death as much as he could at such a young age. That really stood out as a mature young man to be able to do that," Chris says.

Steven's sisters, Christine Barrett and Nancy Ceriani, know their brother was a truly special person.

"Steven knew how to handle things that most kids wouldn't have experienced," says Christine, a 1991 QHS graduate and now principal of Sterling Middle School.

"He could relate to the young, he could relate to the old, he could relate to kids his own age. He talked on their level. He just gelled with everybody," adds Nancy, a 1987 graduate of Archbishop Williams High School and second grade teacher at the Lincoln-Hancock School.

Steven's sisters fondly remember a loving brother known – because of his popularity, friendliness and contagious laugh – as "the mayor."

"They nick-named him the mayor. Every time my sister and I would try to use the phone, we couldn't because he was already on the phone making plans. Our phone would ring off the hook and we'd have to wait for the phone because he was on it," Christine says.

"We'd say to him, 'are you kidding us? You're a boy. You're not supposed to be on the phone.'"

His father adds, "Steven had a great sense of humor. He was a character. As a father I can say he was a good kid. He was loved by all."

It was through that loving spirit that the Barretts established the Steven V. Barrett Memorial Fund. The response was – and remains – overwhelming.

"We got a tremendous response. We are so appreciative of everyone – from family, friends and businesses – who have supported the fund throughout the years," Chris says.

The fund's inception began with a golf tournament. The Varsity Club in Quincy contacted the Barretts about having a golf tournament in Steven's memory. It's grown every year since.

In 10 years, the tournament – which continues to be a sell-out with 144 golfers each year – has raised about $130,000. The list of worthy recipients and charitable causes benefiting from the fund includes scholarships, financial gifts to other memorial funds as well as special donations all in Steven's name (see below).

"The notes that we get from the recipients are so beautiful," Nancy says, adding many of those benefiting from the fund note Steven was a such a wonderful person.

Besides the golf tournament, the family also established a blood drive in Steven's memory. The drive collected 1,120 pints in an eight-year span.

Today, Steven's memorial golf tournament is the family's main focus. This year's event tees off Monday, June 28 at the Halifax Country Club.

But the Barretts credit the success of Steven's fund to the generous support of so many friends and businesses as well as the tournament participants – from the golfers to those donating auction items.

"That means a lot to us," Christine says.

Giving back to the community was an ideal that Steven personified.

"We were brought up by our parents to give back to the community and to be very family oriented. We're doing what we can as citizens in the community," Christine explains.

"We made a pact that we're going to continue to give back and that's what our mom and dad taught us. Steven did that, even though he passed away at 22 he was doing that all through high school."

"We want to take the opportunity to give back to people who don't have as much and are in need or also to just give back because it's the right thing to do. We were very fortunate and educated by the Quincy Public Schools so we feel it's very important to give back so that other students and other children have the same opportunities that we did."

Nancy then adds, "As hard as it is to go to the golf tournament and the blood drive, it's so nice to see everybody. They have nice things to say that they still remember and they talk about Steven. People tell us all the time that Steven touched more lives in his 22 years than most people would touch in a lifetime."

What would Steven make of this fund named in his memory?

His sisters – their eyes reddened by tears – think their brother would be a little embarrassed but more proud by all the good work his memorial fund has done.

His father, reflecting on the question, adds, "You know what he would be thinking about more than anything else? His mom. That's the kind of kid he was. He'd never think of himself. Ever."

Officer Steven Barrett: sorely missed – but never forgotten. His good name – and good will – live on.

Scenes From Yesterday

Holy Trinity Rest House, Adams Shore, Quincy, Mass.

THIS IS A 1920 postcard showing the old Holy Trinity Rest House that was at 85 Shelton Road on the corner of Swan Road in Adams Shore. The house was built as a summer cottage in the early 1900's by Benjamin Johnson, Jr., whose father was the owner of the Johnson Lumber Co. that later became the Quincy Lumber Company. After Johnson's widow died the family allowed a local order of Catholic nuns to use the property as a summer retreat. The bungalow was destroyed by fire in the mid 1920's and the seaside lot remained vacant for 75 years. Today, a permanent residence is located here. The Ross Trial

By FRANK MCCAULEY

The trail of Mayor Charles A. Ross, accused of violating the Corrupt Practices Act pertaining to his reporting campaign contributions and expenses for the 1934 mayoral campaign, got underway on Monday, March 4, 1935 before a tribunal of three Superior Court justices in the Pemberton Square Court House in Boston.

This Week
1935
75 Years Ago

Former Attorney General J. Weston Allen was the lead Counsel for the petitioners and was assisted by Avery Gilkerson, a Quincy attorney. Attorney William P. Kelley represented Mayor Ross and was assisted by City Solicitor Charles Young.

The petitioners charged the following:

- That Mayor Ross spent more money in the election than permitted by law.
- That the Mayor filed an inaccurate statement of campaign expenses.
- That funds for the campaign were solicited in public buildings and from city employees.

The trail would continue to March 18 with many individuals called as witnesses including city officials and city employees, contributors to the Ross campaign as well as vendors who provided materials or services to the campaign.

The trail was civil in nature and not criminal so that Mayor Ross testified in his own behalf. Called to the stand on March 6, the third day of the trial, Mayor Ross was subjected to, according to The Patriot Ledger, "a merciless examination by local counsel J. Weston Allen."

Mayor Ross admitted errors in his financial reports but said they were "honest mistakes made in the heat of a hard-fought campaign." Final arguments in the trial were delivered by both counsel on Monday, March 18, 1935.

Attorney Allen, summing up for the petitioners, demanded that Ross be removed as mayor of Quincy.

Attorney Kelley, counsel for Mayor Ross, summing up said, "You may say the mayor was careless, you may say the mayor was negligent, but you can never say he was guilty of bad faith on the evidence presented here."

The three justices of the Suffolk Superior Court began their deliberations at 10 o'clock on Tuesday, March 19, 1935. (Editor's note: The verdict and the aftermath of the trial will appear in the March 18th edition of The Quincy Sun.)

MAYOR WILL FORCE ISSUE ON NEW WING - ROSS WILL ASK COUNCIL TO BORROW $300,000

In a move to get construction of the North Quincy High School new wing started this summer, Mayor Ross will introduce a $300,000 financial order to the city council requesting authorization to borrow the funds, which will allow the start of construction.

The council is awaiting approval by Congress of President Roosevelt's big relief program bill.

Coach Jim Cotter: Class Personified

My name is John Cristiani, a proud Quincy fireman, husband, and father. I felt compelled to share a few thoughts on a great man residing in our city, Quincy's own Coach Jim Cotter.

You might have seen some of the recent tributes and articles in the newspaper honoring Coach Cotter for all his years of dedicated service to Boston College High School and its vast, extended family.

One word comes to mind when I think of Coach Cotter: class. Words cannot describe how many lives this great man has touched over the years, whether in his role as B.C. High athletic director, football coach, Guidance counselor, or friend. I never had the privilege of meeting his Mom or Dad, but Coach Cotter obviously came from "good stock."

I was fortunate to be part of a special 1985 baseball team that went 22-3 and was inducted into the B.C. High Athletic Hall of Fame in 2005. The best part of the evening for me was that Coach Cotter was the individual who announced my name at the podium.

For anyone who is fortunate enough to know Jim Cotter, you know exactly what I mean. There is no individual a B.C. High student athlete would rather have say his name than Coach Cotter. Class personified.

Shortly after the induction ceremony, my doorbell rang. It was Coach Cotter dropping off a Hall of Fame team picture from the evening. In that picture, Coach Cotter was standing behind the team at the podium.

I often look at the picture and always notice Coach Cotter in the background. I thanked him for the kind gesture and he said humbly, "John, you do not have to call me Coach, please call me Jim."

I then said, "I would feel strange calling you Jim because of all the respect I have for you."

It would be like meeting Vince Lombardi of the Green Bay Packers and calling him Vince instead of Coach Lombardi. It is just not appropriate and not proper.

Out of respect, he will always be Coach Cotter to me.

In summary, for everyone who knows Coach Cotter, you know he is class personified. Just some thoughts from a B.C. High alumnus on my former Guidance Counselor, Coach Jim Cotter.

Says Rules Only Apply To Certain People

How nice that the fire chief was so sure to point out that the five recent promotions in the Quincy Fire Department were based on the highest scores on the most recent Civil Service exam. Especially since he was put in the position of acting chief without ever having taken the chief's exam, (which Civil Service ruled was an illegal appointment by the City of Quincy Mayor's office) and was made permanent chief despite having scored the lowest on the most recent Civil Service exam.

It seems that just like with the mayor of Quincy, rules only apply to certain people.
